Loudspeakers Create a Hubbub As Japanese Election Nears

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM

TOKUSHIMA, Japan—This city is full of noises these days. There is the rhythmic cadence of group calisthenics in the park at dawn. There is the friendly toot of passenger trains leaving the station every few minutes. And there is the soft rustle of brightly colored leaves blowing across the sandy sidewalks on some brisk Pacific breeze.

But there is a new sound drowning out the others. It will go away in a few days. But for now the air is full of electronically abetted shouting whose volume brings a whole new dimension to the word: "loudspeaker," or rather, "LOUDSPEAKER."

Mounted on tiny cars that can pursue people down even the narrowest alley, these machines are hunting 585,000 Japanese in this city and its surrounding province.

The loudspeakers belong to the politicians and to the 585,000 Japanese belong the legal votes that can be cast here Dec. 5 when Japan holds its first nationwide elections in four years for the lower house of Parliament. Similar scenes are occurring in all of Japan's 130 electoral districts as 898 candidates vie for 511 seats.

A Native Is Prime Minister

But this election is special for the people of Tokushima (the name can be translated as Virtuous Island). For the first time in history, a Tokushima has grown up, taken the ferryboat from Shikoku, the smallest of Japan's four principal islands, to Honshu, the main island, and returned as Prime Minister of Japan.

Prime Minister Takeo Miki, the 69-year-old political maverick, has served in Japan's Parliament since 1937, longer than any other member. Two years ago the other bosses of his Liberal-Democratic Party picked him as a compromise interim leader of the majority party, and he thus became Prime Minister.

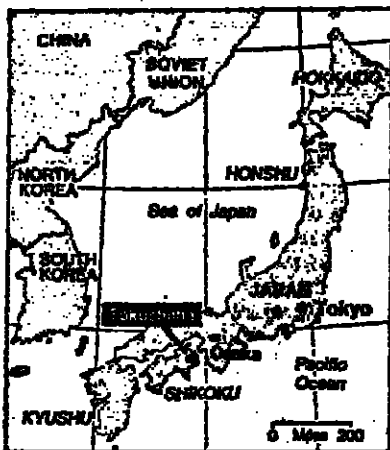

Mr. Miki had not been back to Tokushima since then. Aides say Mr. Miki has simply been too busy with the problems of the nation to concern himself with petty political dealings for his own benefit.

Mr. Miki returned here for a few hours Nov. 28. He is touring many constituencies seeking the election of other conservatives who will support him after Dec. 5 in a bid to maintain his party leadership.

Meanwhile, Mr. Miki's Cabinet members, his wife, Mitsuko, and his son-in-law and secretary, Wataru Takahashi, campaign for him throughout the 1,600-square-mile district and especially here in Tokushima, the populous prefectural capital where Mr. Miki has substantial real estate and broadcasting interests.

As do the representatives of the other seven candidates for the district's five house seats, they "meet the people" in Japanese campaign style. For 10 hours a day they cruise the roads in cars with loudspeakers. Occasionally during the day and three times each evening they make brief speeches in small corner gatherings or in one of the many modern buildings in Tokushima.

As in most Asian cities there is no grid pattern in Tokushima's streets; they twist in all directions. There are wide, winding boulevards with flowered median strips. And there are dark narrow lanes lit only by the faded paper lanterns of the family-run restaurants and geisha houses whose business is not exactly booming these days.

"Things are always low before an election," said Yoshiharu Ishikawa, a habitué of such establishments. "The politicians are the big spenders and they are busy elsewhere."

Worse yet, he said, is the decline of the geisha profession, whose dwindling ranks of kimono-clad members pour the drinks, serve the foods and act as attentive attendants to the egos of male diners.

"Soon," Mr. Ishikawa said, "all the geisha will be aged."

Many other area women, once confined largely to the home, are working more now in the hilly forests and flat tobacco, rice, vegetable and flower farm fields that cover 80 percent of the province.

With the growth in recent years of the textile, ball-bearing, processed food and chemical industries here, the women's husbands have gone off to work by day in the factories of cities like Tokushima, which has a population of 223,451, almost 30 percent of the province's total.

Voting Patterns Uncertain

With grandparents watching the children, such arrangements, which by some estimates involve 85 percent of the area's rural families, enable a modern-day farm family to remain on the ancestral lands and yet increase its total income. This may help slow the population rush to the jobs of the overcrowded cities. But it also blurs the traditional Japanese distinction between city and rural resident with accompanying social and political ramifications.

How will the new urban worker-rural dweller vote? For the conservatives who have built a rural political base into a 20-year nationwide rule? Or will the farmer-turned-factory-hand vote Socialist, as his union urges?

There may be no connection with such social changes, but law-enforcement authorities here have detected a rise in the number of crimes committed by women recently, mainly shoplifting.

Crime, however, is not a major issue in the current political campaign. As is the case almost everywhere else in Japan, residents of Tokushima routinely leave valuable packages in unlocked cars with the ignition key in place. Lost wallets are returned intact.

And the boulevards and streets and lanes and alleys are left nowadays to the politicians and their loudspeakers.

Syrians in Lebanon Warn on Guns

By HENRY TANNER

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Nov. 30—Syria has threatened to use military force if necessary to remove heavy weapons from Palestinian guerrillas and Lebanese militia forces, now generally observing a cease-fire after more than a year and a half of civil war.

The threat of Syrian military force was made by Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam at a news conference in Kuwait yesterday, three days after Palestinian officials here accepted a demand for the surrender of heavy weapons in Palestinian refugee camps and in southern Lebanon near Israel.

Mr. Khaddam's statement was regarded as a general signal to all concerned that the Syrian Army in Lebanon would tolerate no opposition from anyone as it endeavored to enforce the cease-fire proclaimed a month ago. Mr. Khaddam has been one of President Hafez al-Assad's principal lieutenants in conducting Syrian policy here.

Syrians Arrest Gun Bearers

Syrian troops have been arresting any Christian or Moslem encountered with a handgun or assault rifle or any one wearing in public items of military uniform. The Palestinians have kept their weapons in camps for refugees and Lebanese militia forces continue to have arms and uniforms in their barracks or camps. At night, an 11-month curfew is strictly enforced. The few cars that venture along the dark and largely deserted streets are stopped every few hundred yards by Syrian soldiers. Drivers and passengers are asked to show their papers and often to open the car trunk for inspection.

Each day produces another collection of rumors and reports about stern treatment by Syrian troops of people on both sides of the cease-fire line. The accounts can seldom be verified.

The dividing line, though no longer the scene of daily firing and shelling, still exists but the number of people who cross it is increasing daily. The ones who are not yet crossing the line are former combatants on both sides, who are afraid they may be recognized.

Palestinians, even those who never carried a gun, are still afraid to go from west Beirut to the Christian quarters on the eastern side.

In Mideast, the Talk Now Is of Peace but Some Fear the Mood May Dissipate

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—Peace talk coming from Washington, Cairo and Jerusalem in recent weeks has created new expectations that a major diplomatic effort for a Middle East settlement will be undertaken next year. Although Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and his aides assert that the Carter Administration will inherit an unprecedented opportunity for negotiating an agreement, they concede, however, that no clear way is apparent for overcoming obstacles that have blocked an overall Middle East peace settlement for nearly a decade.

And most Middle East experts privately say that unless Israel and the Arabs make major compromises they have resisted up to now, the improved atmosphere may quickly dissipate. The expectations of this winter could turn into frustration by next summer and the words of peace could turn into talk of war, with the accompanying dangers of a Soviet-United States confrontation and oil embargoes.

The end of the Presidential campaign and the coinciding Arab moves to settle the Lebanese civil war have allowed all parties to focus on Arab-Israeli diplomacy, after more than a year of diplomatic inactivity on that front.

In advance of whatever review Mr. Carter orders of the Middle East situation, President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt and Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin of Israel have begun trying to persuade Washington, and the rest of the world, of their good intentions without going so far as to indicate where the crucial compromises are possible.

Mr. Kissinger's optimism stems from the stated desire of the parties for peace and also from the moves by Syria and Egypt to end their feuding.

Before the breakdown in diplomacy, Mr. Kissinger had negotiated two Egyptian-Israeli accords and one between Israel and Syria, returning to the two Arab countries territories captured by Israel in the 1973 war and modest amounts of land taken in the 1967 war.

Reactions to Rabin's Proposal on Talks Cheer Israel

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times

JERUSALEM, Nov. 30—A number of Israeli officials are surprised and pleased by the impact and publicity accorded Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin's recent proposal for a Geneva conference on the Middle East since, in their view, he was not breaking any new ground in the Arab-Israeli impasse. Their pleasure derives from the fact that Mr. Rabin was able simultaneously to appear statesmanlike and to score a few points for Israel in the new round of moves initiated by the Arabs aimed at convincing the international community that they are softening their opposition to Israel in eagerness to renew negotiations for a settlement.

Since the Arabs, particularly the Egyptians, mounted this offensive, which officials regarded here as skillful propaganda rather than substantive offers to end the protracted Arab-Israeli conflict, Israel has been in a position of reacting rather than initiating.

Mr. Rabin's move has reaped a measure of praise for him here at home in an election year during which he has been the target of harsh criticism for his domestic policies as well as for his previous handling of the Arab posture "moderation."

COUNCIL EXTENDS GOLAN PEACE FORCE

An Attempt to Inject Political Notes Into the 6-Month Renewal Resolution Defeated by Israel

By PETER GROSE
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Nov. 30—The Security Council agreed today to renew its six-month mandate of the United Nations Disengagement Observer Force on the Golan Heights.

Arab diplomats attempted at the last moment to inject a modest political note into the renewal resolution, but Israel, with strong backing from Britain, France and the United States, was successful in preventing any significant change from the mandate adopted last May.

Meanwhile, the General Assembly and its committees pursued their discussions of diverse Arab-initiated resolutions concerning Israeli practices in the territories occupied and its alleged assistance to the white minority regime of South Africa.

The chief Israeli delegate, Chaim Herzog, has calculated that this General Assembly is now devoting 50 per cent of its time to various forms of criticism of Israel, after its initial preoccupation with the situation in southern Africa.

Long-Range Objective Seen
Even the diplomats most directly involved in promoting the anti-Israeli resolutions in the Assembly seem under no illusion that their actions are having any real effect on the discreet diplomatic negotiations for a possible new round of Arab-Israeli talks in the spring.

Arab aim, rather, seems to be to lay the groundwork in the official records for pressure against Israel in future years.

The Council's renewal of the mandate for the Golan peacekeeping force was in no way significant. Without that, the symbolic buffer of a 1,248-man United Nations presence between Israel and Syrian lines would have been withdrawn. The deadline was midnight.

More than a week ago the chief Syrian negotiator, Mowaffak Allaf, informed Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim of his Government's concurrence in the proposed resolution, without attaching new political conditions. Israel promptly did the same.

At the end of last week, as the resolution was being drafted, Syrian representatives reportedly asked for inclusion of some reference to a proposed conference at which the Palestine Liberation Organization would participate alongside Israel and the Arab states. They would have made a substantive contribution to an otherwise routine resolution and the majority of Council members, in private consultations, refused to do so.

New Clause Added by Arabs
Arab diplomats, backed by the Soviet Union, wrote in a new clause a sentence from a recent report by Waldheim as gentle nudge toward a diplomatic movement on the Middle East. While acknowledging that the change was relatively innocuous, the representatives argued that the resolution should be carried out strictly in conformity with past UN action.

Herzog insisted on this principle through long discussions, forcing postponement of a Council meeting scheduled for yesterday to act on the matter. Early in this month's Council session, Enriquez Illueca of Panama, approved Israel's and Syria's agreement to a procedural compromise, which won approval of the Council majority.

The formal resolution, approved by a vote of 12 to 0, with three countries—China, Libya and Benin—not participating, was substantially identical to last year's resolution. Then Mr. Illueca recited, expressing the Council's opinion, the sentence from Mr. Waldheim's report, expressing the view that "the situation in the Middle East will remain unstable and potentially dangerous unless real progress can be made toward a just and lasting settlement of the problem in all its aspects."

The mistress of the 107-year-old college, Prof. Brenda Rynan, says that male students will be admitted starting next year and undergraduates some time later in 1978.

Girton's action follows moves by seven other women's colleges at Cambridge to admit men. The two other women's colleges, Newnham and New Hall, have indicated their readiness to accept men.

BILL ASKS SOME RULE BY SCOTS AND WELSH

ists in Scotland and Wales, who want complete independence, and a much larger group that wants greater control over the affairs of the areas without, however, the pain of a complete break with the central Government.

The Scots will be able to elect an assembly of 150 members, the Welsh 80. Each assembly will be financed by an annual grant provided by the central Government and will have the power to determine spending priorities in such areas as education, housing, transportation and industrial development.

At the same time, however, the assemblies would not be able to raise revenue through taxes. London would also keep authority over defense, foreign relations and the rich North Sea oil deposits off Scotland, which have already played a significant role in Scotland's determined drive for more home rule.

The central Government would also retain certain "reserve powers" to intervene if the assemblies passed laws—even in the areas where responsibility had been "devolved" to them—that seemed to threaten the interests of the nation as a whole.

"We think this is what the majority of the people in Scotland want," said Michael Foot, the Cabinet minister in charge of getting the bill through the session. He asserted that the bill answered the "legitimate" aspirations of the Scottish and Welsh people for more self-government, and added: "If we did not have devolution proposals of this nature, the danger of the breakup of the United Kingdom would be even greater."

Even some moderates in the major parties fear that there is no such thing as a stable half-way position between mild devolution and some form of federalism under which the Scots would win control of their own economic destiny. Opinion polls show that Scottish nationalism is more than a passing phenomenon. Accordingly, the nationalists, who have worked hard to create effective grass-roots organizations, might be expected to do well in local races for assembly seats, where traditional party loyalties might have less influence on voters than they would in a general election.

The important long-term question—assuming that the bill passes in some form—is whether establishment of the assemblies will be enough to satisfy ardent nationalists or whether they will only create an appetite for more self-government, especially in Scotland.

People like Mr. Reid, whose complaint is essentially "no representation without taxation," firmly believe that the nationalists will gain control of the Scottish assembly and, through constant pressure, force London to give it real revenue-raising powers.

That the Scots will be satisfied with the restricted assembly now being offered. The number of people in Scotland who want complete independence has never risen above 20 percent of the voting population. A like number want little or no change in the present system. The remaining 60 percent want some sort of Scottish parliament.

The measure London is offering is in one sense a response to modern political forces, mainly nationalism, and a sense of dismay with the central Government's handling of the economy. But it can also be construed as a response to cultural differences and even grievances over centuries. However successful the United Kingdom has been, it has never been able to obscure the fact that its constituent parts retained a sense of identity.

Wales, for example, was settled thousands of years ago, and only in the 13th century—after many invasions and quiet efforts to subjugate its people—Wales began to accept the idea of union with England. A distinct sense of "Welshness" continues among the Welsh people.

Similarly, Scotland has reacted frequently and sometimes violently against England. For centuries, Scotland was a separate kingdom. Then, in the early 16th century, James VI of Scotland, the son of Mary Queen of Scots, succeeded Elizabeth I of England and so became James I of England. He used the term "United Kingdom" as early as 1604 to show that the countries were joined under his rule, but the formal union did not occur until 1707.

Bangladesh Strongman Said to Widen Powers

DACCA, Bangladesh, Nov. 30 (AP)—Bangladesh's military strongman, Maj. Gen. Ziaur Rahman, has assumed full powers to run the nation as chief martial law administrator and has arrested at least 11 prominent politicians, an official source said today.

The source said that former President Khondakar Mushtaque Ahmen was among those who were arrested yesterday for "prejudicial activities against the state." Others included Abu Malek Ukil, former speaker of the now-defunct Parliament; three former ministers of state—Nomin Talukdar, Shah Moazzem Hossain and Obaidur Rahman—party leaders and former legislators, he said.

Charges of corruption were also made against some of them, the source said. The political crackdown came 12 hours after the Government announced that General Rahman had become chief martial law administrator. The title was held for the last year by President Abu Sadat Mohammad Sayem. Mr. Sayem reportedly remained as President although stripped of all powers.

Venezuelan Leader Pledges Oil Supplies for Portugal

LISBON, Nov. 30 (Reuters)—President Carlos Andrés Pérez of Venezuela ended a two-week tour of Europe today after signing an agreement under which his country will supply Portugal with oil and pledged to support its fledgling democracy.

During his two-day visit—the first to Portugal by a Venezuelan head of state—President Pérez frequently praised the Western-style democratic administration established here earlier this year. He promised to help Portugal out of its grave economic crisis by providing Venezuelan oil on easy credit terms. The amount of oil involved was not specified.

President Pérez said he had told Prime Minister Mário Soares at a working breakfast today that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, of which Venezuela is a member, favored contributing financially to developing nations such as Portugal that might be affected by an increase in the price of oil.

Another visitor here was the United States Secretary of Commerce, Elliot L. Richardson, who arrived today for talks with Portuguese leaders on the economic situation.

Relatives of Crash Victims Contacted in Soviet

MOSCOW, Nov. 30 (Reuters)—Aviation experts today were investigating the crash of a Soviet airliner near Moscow on Sunday and condolences were sent to relatives of victims in an unusual admission of a disaster affecting Soviet citizens.

Western airline sources said all 72 people aboard died when the plane, a twin-engine TU-104 turbojet, crashed about five minutes after takeoff from Moscow for Leningrad.

The Soviet Union rarely acknowledges air disasters so promptly, but the official press agency, Tass, said that relatives of the dead, all but one of whom were Soviet citizens, had been informed. A Czechoslovakian also died in the crash. The crash is believed to be the fifth this year involving the state airline Aeroflot, although two have not been officially confirmed.

4 Bodies Recovered in Kenyan Train Wreck

NAIROBI, Kenya, Nov. 30 (Reuters)—Officials said today that the death toll in the train wreck yesterday could reach 28. So far 14 bodies have been recovered from the wreckage of a locomotive, five passenger cars and a freight car derailed after floods undermined a track on the Mombasa line 150 miles southeast of Nairobi. Additional bodies were believed to be in a partly submerged car. About 200 people were injured, eight seriously. The train was carrying 620 passengers and a crew of 28.

Communications Minister Omolo Okero said abnormally heavy rains had created a deep lake that swept away the tracks' support.

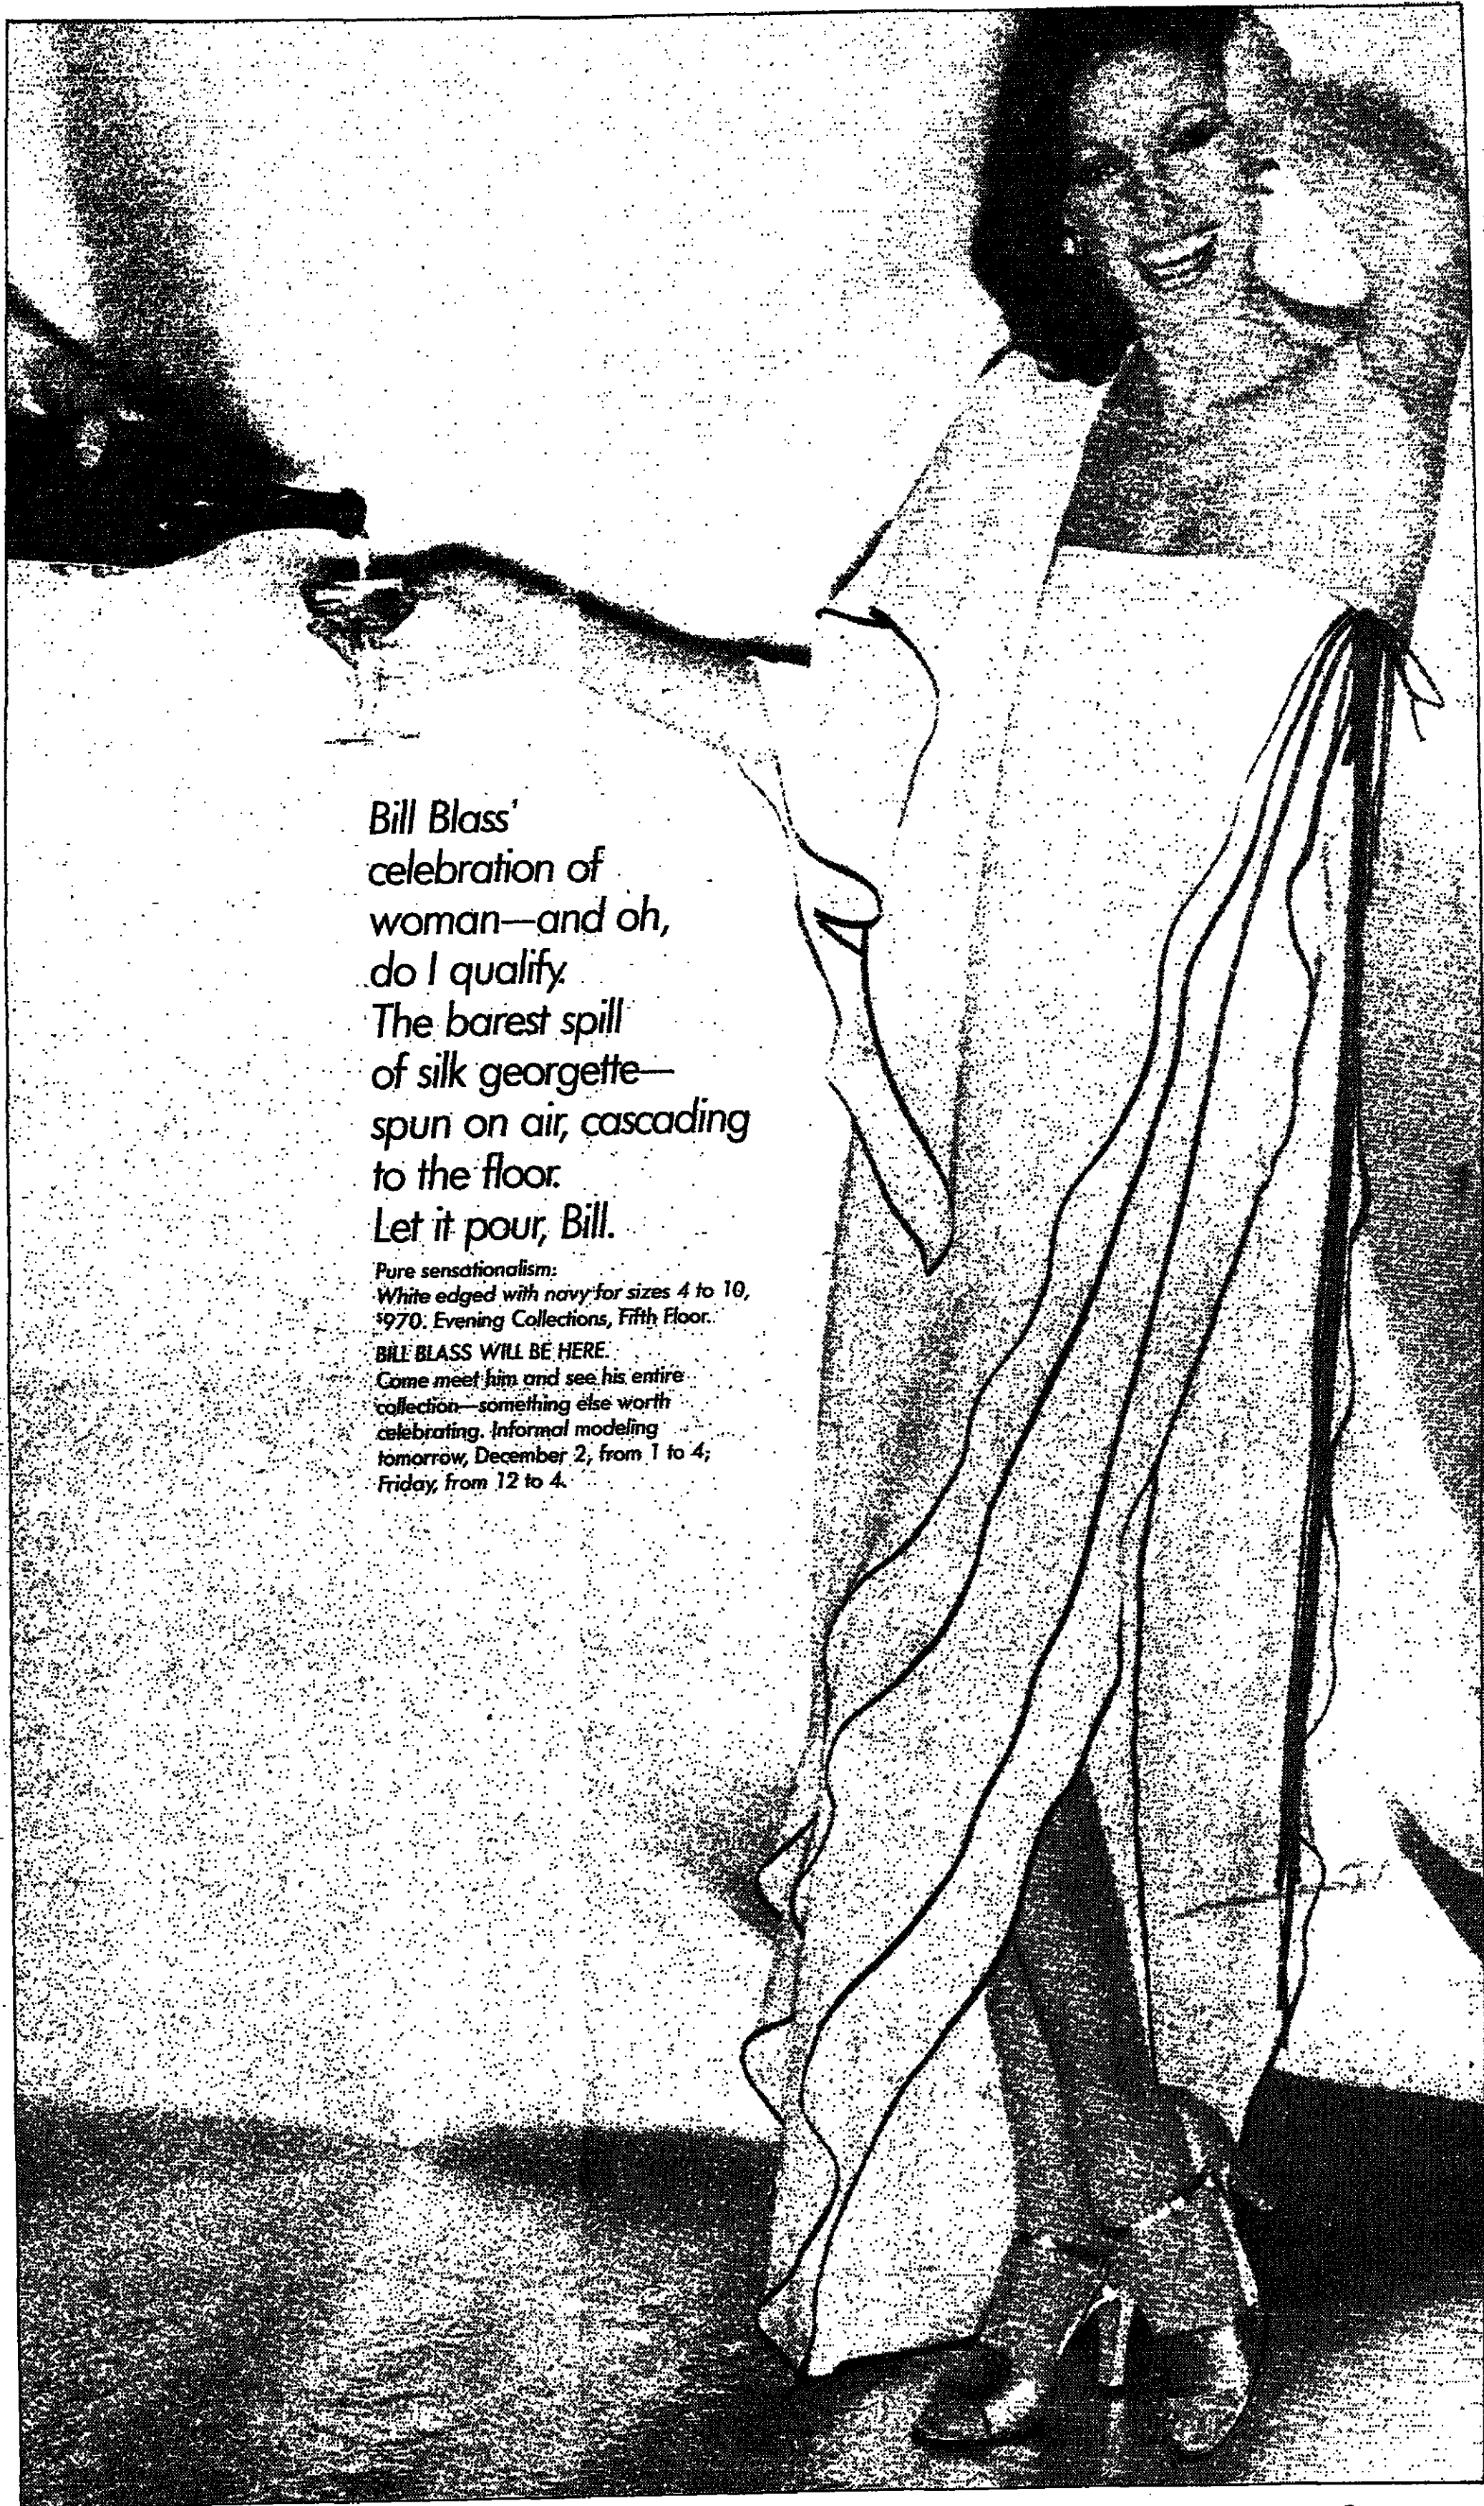

Virus in Zaire Epidemic Named for Ebola River

KINSHASA, Zaire, Nov. 30 (Agence France-Press)—The virus responsible for the recent epidemic of green monkey fever that claimed several hundred lives will be known as the Ebola Virus, after a river in the north, the Health Ministry announced today.

A statement said no direct link had been established between the virus that struck at Yambuku and the Marburg virus, which caused a similar epidemic in the Sudan earlier this year.

Brezhnev Bids Carter Push Pact to 1 in favor of the United States. Some of the other American exports this year resulted from contracts signed before the trade bill was enacted. Mr. Brezhnev contended that American companies had lost $1.5 million to $2 million worth of Soviet orders in the last two years because of the Congressional restrictions.

"It is for the American side to rectify an abnormal situation," Mr. Brezhnev said. The Soviet Foreign Trade Minister, Nikolai S. Patolichev, made the same point to the businessmen this afternoon when he said that, without a lifting of the present restrictions, the Soviet Union would turn increasingly to its other Western partners. They are West Germany, Japan, Finland, Italy, France and Britain.

Today's sessions were attended by the Secretary of the Treasury, William E. Simon, who met with Mr. Brezhnev later this afternoon. These talks were first characterized by the official press agency Tass as "friendly and constructive." The assessment was later corrected to "friendly and businesslike," suggesting a slightly cooler atmosphere.

The lack of equal trade consideration and the deadlock over the strategic arms agreement are viewed by the Kremlin as two principal points of friction. Guidelines for the arms pact were agreed upon by Mr. Brezhnev and President Ford in a meeting at Vladivostok in November, 1974, but detailed negotiations have been dragging on.

The guidelines set a ceiling of 2,400

strategic missile launchers and bombers on each side, of which 1,320 might be armed with multiple warheads. Technical disagreement arose over whether an American cruise missile and a Soviet bomber, code-named Backfire by the West, should be included.

Last January, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger came here for talks at which the differences were reportedly whittled down. An American diplomat said in the summer that an agreement was 90 percent concluded, and last week Mr. Brezhnev asserted in a speech in Bucharest, Rumania, that it was virtually ready.

Moscow seems to have made the conclusion of the pact its first order of business with the Carter administration. At a news conference two weeks ago, Mr. Carter, too, said he would make the issue a top item on his agenda.

Mr. Brezhnev praised the progress already made by the two nations to reduce the risk of nuclear war.

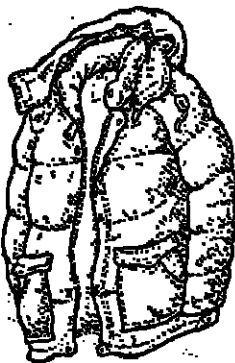

"We are prepared to go further along this road in cooperation with the new American administration if it is prepared to act in the same spirit," the Soviet leader said.

In particular, he recalled last week's Warsaw Pact appeal to prohibit first use of nuclear weapons and an earlier Soviet offer to abandon development of "corresponding types" of weapons if the United States set aside its Trident submarine and B-1 strategic bomber. He complained about Western charges that the Soviet Union posed a military threat.

Blacks Reject Rhodesia Proposals

GENEVA, Nov. 30 — Proposals that Rhodesian whites be allowed to control the army and the police during the transition to black majority rule were rejected here today by two black nationalist leaders. The nationalists, Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe, said that any interim government that would prepare for Rhodesia's formal independence from Britain under black rule should be controlled by the black liberation movement, with its members holding "all the ministries directly or indirectly concerned with the completion of the pre-independence processes." The two leaders made these points in outlining to Ivor Richard, the Briton who is chairman of the conference on Rhodesia's future, the kind of interim government they want. Their position was denounced as unacceptable at a news conference held by the head of the white minority Government's delegation, Foreign Minister P.K. van der Byl. Mr. van der Byl said that the idea that Rhodesian whites hold the defense ministry and law and order ministry in an interim government had been agreed to in what he termed the "Anglo-American" proposals that led to the calling of the conference. Otherwise, he commented, "we would not be here." For the Rhodesian Government, none of the principles it says were established in negotiations with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger as the basis for the conference is negotiable. These provide for a two-tier biracial government that would be responsible for preparing a new constitution and for the carrying out of the processes for the turnover of rule by representatives of Rhodesia's 270,000 whites to its six million blacks within two years. Rhodesians Report Routing Guerrillas RUSAP, Rhodesia, Nov. 30 (Reuters)—Rhodesian forces have routed a big band of guerrillas with a series of air and ground attacks, military officers said today. Military Service Extended LISURUY, Rhodesia, Nov. 30 (UPI)—Defense Minister Reginald Cowper announced today that soldiers ending 18 months' active duty in the next few months would have their service extended for periods up to three months. Mr. Nkomo and Mr. Mugabe, who have formed an alliance called the "patriotic front," also called on Britain to recognize its responsibility to "decolonize" Rhodesia by appointing a resident commissioner to make sure that any accord on transfer of rule reached here would be full carried out.

The low-tar cigarette that doesn't cheat your taste.

It seems hard to believe. Most low-tar cigarettes are low-taste cigarettes. So who's kidding who? If Pall Mall Extra Mild has only 7 mg. tar, how can it be an exception? The reason Pall Mall Extra Mild is de-tarred, but not de-tasted is because it has the Air-Stream-filter that reduces tar—but not taste. What's more Pall Mall Extra Mild starts with the finest tobacco money can buy. Tobaccos specifically selected for extra mild taste. And when you've got great taste to begin with, you've got great taste to end with. Try a carton. You'll find it hard to believe you've smoking a cigarette with less tar than 95% of all cigarettes sold!

UNESCO Meetings End With Tributes To Quiet Progress

By MICHAEL T. KAUFMAN

NAIROBI, Kenya, Nov. 30—The five-week UNESCO conference ended today with repeated hymns to the unity and accord that a suspension of speakers regarded as the spirit of Nairobi. Recalling the last session two years ago in Paris, Amadou Mahtar M'bow, the organization's director general, said the meeting had been characterized by "passionate and sometimes violent statements, explanations of votes colored by bitterness and sometimes fraught with scarcely veiled threats." This year, he said, "no one can have failed to notice that during this session the atmosphere has never been tense and such differences have never reached the stage of clashes and still less of open conflict." In their private conversations, delegates today seemed satisfied not so much with the modest agenda of resolutions that were passed, as with the avoidance of acrimonious and politicized rancor that was viewed at the outset of the conference as a real threat. Specifically, what were regarded as the dangerous shoals of full Israeli participation in UNESCO and a Soviet-backed resolution calling for all governments to control news gathering within their countries, were skirted without the risk of wrecking the conference. On the Israeli question, one that involves Israel's desire to participate as a member of the European group from which it was barred two years ago, a procedural compromise was worked out in which members of the group itself rather than the full 141-country organization were permitted to vote on membership. Israel was accepted and her pariah status ended. Related to that vote were two resolutions of censure directed at Israel. One called for the sending of a panel to investigate whether Israeli authorities were denying Arab children in Gaza and on the West Bank of the Jordan River their educational rights and cultural heritage. The second resolution condemned Israel for continuing archeological digs in Jerusalem, citing them as threatening religious sites. According to an old hand at UNESCO meetings, even here the language was relatively mild. "It was not so much a condemnation as a censure," said the man, a member of the secretariat. "Everyone knew, for instance, that Israel is prepared to stop the digging in two months but didn't want it to appear that she was bowing to pressure. Both resolutions were seen by everybody, I think, as really a small price to pay for Israel's full participation in the organization." Other anti-Israeli positions were repeatedly beaten back. Many delegates from both Eastern and Western countries praised the African delegations for the moderation that was achieved. "This was the first conference held in Africa," said a member of the secretariat. "The director general is a son of Africa, and the Africans worked damn hard to make sure it would succeed keeping the pressure on their Arab allies." He also pointed out that Africa was a major beneficiary of UNESCO programs and might suffer disproportionately if disaffected rich countries took budgetary reprisals at what they considered to be excesses in resolutions here. One country that has done so is the United States, which under Congressional resolution has kept its contributions to UNESCO two years in arrears and now owes $38 million. This Congressional action was taken after Israel was excluded from the European group two years ago. At this meeting the United States delegation concentrated its efforts on the Israeli question and on the media issue. Said one member of the delegation, "We've come off better than we thought we might." John Reinhardt, head of the delegation, expressed gratification that the Soviet media resolution, with its condoning of government control of information, was shelved, to be submitted as the basis of study for discussion at the next general meeting in 1978.

Spain's Opposition to Get TV Time

MADRID, Nov. 30 (AP)—The government television monopoly announced today that it would give equal time to Spanish political parties and leaders campaigning against the national referendum on parliamentary elections. The network, which normally transmits only the Government's views, said it would open its screens to legally registered political parties and to "the most distinguished political leaders." A spokesman said this could include members of the leftist opposition who are urging abstention from the referendum Dec. 15. The spokesman added that the Interior Ministry had ordered the network to bar the Communist Party and groups to its left. The Government has also approved a national convention of Socialists, the first such meeting in Spain since the civil war. It will start Friday and is expected to attract leading European leftists.

Spain's Expatriates Are Having a Voice In Key Referendum

By JAMES M. WAREHAM
Special to The New York Times
MADRID, Nov. 30—Spaniards began voting yesterday in Rome, Brussels, Liverpool, Paris and Fernando Po, among other places. The polls open today in New York and Washington, D.C.
First reports suggest that the turnout was light. There are no projections—indeed, it is uncertain how many voters there are—but the Government seems confident of getting a hefty majority for its political reform bill. The bill, approved earlier this month by the Franco-era rubber-stamp legislature, should in early 1977 give Spain its first freely elected parliament in 41 years.
For the first time in history, Spanish expatriates around the world, thought today to number 3.2 million, are being asked their political opinions.
A nationwide popular referendum on the bill will be held in Spain on Dec. 15. But to allow time for the ballots to reach home on time, the overseas polls in embassies and consulates are opening and closing early.
The Deadline Is Sunday
Spanish citizens over the age of 21 have until Sunday to mark "yes," "no" or a blank space—equivalent to an abstention—on ballots available at foreign missions that can either be deposited there or mailed home.

Around the world, one foreign ministry official said, there are about 250 "polling places," counting embassies, consulates and honorary consulates.
Foreign Ministry officials say that the ballots collected at its missions will be sent home by diplomatic pouch, and that instructions have been given to guarantee that the contents of the ballots remain secret.
"This is without precedent—neither under the First or Second Republic were overseas Spaniards asked to vote," said one Foreign Ministry official. "There are very few countries in the world that do this."
The Franco regime held two national referendums to ratify "fundamental" and "organic" statutes—in 1947 and 1966—and won them both with thumping maorities, without bothering about Spaniards overseas.

The Government of Prime Minister Adolfo Suárez, according to well-placed informants, had its interest in the overseas vote stirred after an unpublished poll showed that Spaniards living in France were essentially conservative.
"The poll was taken before King Juan Carlos's visit to France," said one informant. "It showed that the immigrants were anti-Franco, but economically conservative."
That is just the kind of Spaniard most likely to vote "si" for the Suárez reform, which amounts to a gentle, though fundamental, break with the Franco past.
Moreover, it has been suggested, the spectacle of Spanish diplomats placing advertisements in newspapers around the world urging citizens to vote on a question of democratic reform does a bit to enhance Spain's new, post-Franco image abroad.

Offices in New York Busy
A spokesman at the Spanish Consulate in New York said this week that she had received many calls from Spaniards visiting or resident here seeking information about the forthcoming voting.
In addition to the New York consulate, Spaniards can vote at the consulate offices in Boston, Chicago, Houston, Los Angeles, Miami, New Orleans, San Francisco, San Juan and the Embassy in Washington. They can also vote on the weekend, when the consulates are closed, at Spanish cultural centers in the cities.
The callers are asking mainly what they have to do to vote. They are told they have to have proof that they are 21 years of age or more and that they are Spanish citizens.

EUROPE EMPHASIZES U.S. ECONOMIC ROLE

Common Market Meeting Closes— Plan Set for Early Contact With Carter Administration

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

THE HAGUE, Nov. 30 — Admitting gloomier prospects than they foresaw last summer, Common Market leaders ended their conference today with the flat statement that hopes for European unity could not progress without economic recovery. They also made it clear that they considered United States intentions crucial to their plans.

For the first time, the government heads made a point of establishing a procedure for the community to seek the earliest possible contact with the new American administration. There will be European foreign ministers' meetings later this month to draw up a mandate for the community's president to contact President-elect Jimmy Carter, and seek a high-level meeting with Europe's representatives soon after the new administration is installed.

The Dutch held the Common Market presidency until Dec. 31, and the move may come by then, top officials said. Otherwise, it will be the task of Britain, which assumes the presidency on Jan. 1, 1977. The idea of sending a delegation to Mr. Carter's inauguration was discarded on the ground that it would be too soon for fruitful talks.

Although several government heads spoke openly and urgently about the importance for Europe as a whole as well as for their individual countries—of working closely with the United States, their statement said next year's goals would be possible only if, among other moves, further efforts were made to coordinate economic policies at the community and international level.

Agreements With U.S. the Key

The reference to the international level obviously included a warning against Japan's heavy volume of exports and oil producers' price rises. But the debates made it clear that Europe's first priority now is to reach agreements with the United States as the basis for further negotiations with the third world and for its own programs.

None of the leaders noted explicitly that this was a complete turn from the attitudes expressed three years ago when friction was intense.

But Prime Minister Leo Tindemans of Belgium recalled the changes in Europe's own aspirations during that period. At their Paris conference in 1972, he told a news conference after the meeting today, the leaders proclaimed their decision to create a European union. In 1973, in Copenhagen, acceleration of that plan was made the prime goal. In Paris again in 1974, Mr. Tindemans was appointed to prepare a report defining the goal and recommending how to get it going.

He completed it a year later, and after the conference discussed it today. Mr. Tindemans was obliged to take comfort in a statement that it was not buried, as some reports predicted. He compared Europe to marathon runners: "They look exhausted and about to collapse during the race, but after all they do manage to reach the finish line."

Statement by European Council

The European Council, composed of the heads of government, issued a statement on the Tindemans report reflecting the loss of optimism.

Priority importance now, it said, must be given to combating inflation and unemployment and to drawing up common energy and research policies and a genuine regional and social policy for the community. On future political plans, it limited itself to calling for the best use of possibilities for cooperation in those areas where the member states are prepared to exercise their sovereignty in a progressively convergent manner.

Unlike the once-energetic efforts to reach a joint European foreign policy, the statement said that in this field cooperation must lead to the search for a common external policy.

The immediate economic situation took predominance. The leaders considered it an achievement to have agreed that they must try to defend the degree of unity that the community has already achieved, maintain the free movement of goods and people among themselves, and beat back pressures for national protectionism within the Common Market's borders.

While all the member countries feel affected by what they called the slow-down in recovery, the leaders endorsed a statement by the Permanent Commission pinpointing the growing and drastic differences in the members' economies as a threat to the community's cohesion.

Visit to China's Armed Forces: Big but Poor in New Arms numbering over a million. However, much of the equipment observed on the tour is 10 to 15 years out of date—anachronistic in an era of supersonic strike aircraft and remotely piloted weapons of the one-shot, one-kill generation—because Chinese industry is not capable of producing what is needed.

China is a nuclear power, but its missile-delivery system, like other arms, apparently lags behind those of the Soviet Union and the United States. Medium-range and intermediate-range ballistic missiles are believed by foreign experts to be vulnerable to Soviet nuclear missiles sited in Siberia and Soviet Central Asia. The 75-millimeter recoilless rifles displayed by the infantry division would be an inadequate counter to modern Soviet tanks. The F-6 jets, the Chinese version of the Soviet MIG-19, would be no match in weapons, radar or avionics for the present generation of Soviet fighters and strike aircraft.

Small Segment Put on View

With only a small proportion of an enormous force open to inspection, one is tempted to assume that the units shown were among the best.

The 38th Air Division, for example, is part of the forces guarding Peking against air attack and would cooperate in battle with the Peking Military Region which, according to foreign analysts, includes some of the best-armed, best-trained units. The 179th Infantry Division, stationed outside Nanjing, is part of the field army that would be committed immediately upon attack.

Enough was disclosed about training, doctrine, weapons, passive defense measures and industrial potential to lead to the tentative conclusion that in a war with the Soviet Union, China's advantage in deployed and reserve manpower would be balanced, and perhaps more than balanced, by the Russians' superiority in sophisticated missiles, aircraft and tanks. Strict adherence to current doctrine, which emphasizes "people's war"—overwhelming infantry strength—might also be a drawback. That doctrine was successful in the conflicts with the Japanese and the Chinese Nationalists in protracted land warfare, but some of its principles appear irrelevant to a modern conflict fought at long range in which the deployment of masses of infantry and militia against a distant enemy would strain the transportation system and might be hazardous against an enemy enjoying air and missile superiority.

View of the New Chairman

Foreign analysts in Peking believe that the new Communist Party Chairman, Hua Kuo-feng, and Yeh Chien-yen, Minister of Defense, regard eventual war with the Russians as a real possibility. The impression is created that it is not an artificial threat to spur the workers. Even in the midst of descriptions of day-to-day problems, officials of industrial and farming communes are likely to interject bitter criticisms of the Soviet Union for abandoning China in 1960, leaving industrial and agricultural enterprises unfinished, and to voice warnings of Soviet forces that, in the north, are only a few hundred miles distant.

Statements about "the dangerous polar bears to the north" and "the new tears in Moscow" and their ambitions are invariably accompanied by assertions that as Mr. Wu, the deputy chief of staff, said, "generally speaking, we are confident that we can wipe out all aggressors." This confidence is based on the Chinese Communists' experience against the Japanese in World War II and in the civil war against Chiang Kai-shek's Nationalists. Like the French in 1939, the Chinese consider the lessons of past wars to be immutable.

Just as the French confidently expected the Germans to destroy themselves in frontal attacks on the Maginot Line, so the Chinese believe that the Russians will invade with large forces. Suggestions that the Russians, who destroyed the invading armies of Napoleon and Hitler, are too experienced to use such tactics against China are ignored. Indeed, the Chinese appear to be making the assumption that a potential enemy will do what you wish him to do. "If you send troops into China," Mr. Wu said, "the enemy would have to move not in twos and threes but in columns. The aggressors will be drowned in the sea of the people's war."

'You Fight Your Way'

When it was suggested that Soviet armored and mechanized divisions under an umbrella of aircraft and missiles might seize Manchurian industrial areas and ports rather than launch an invasion, Mr. Wu's answer was: "There's a saying, you fight in your way, we fight in ours."

In the emphasis on the importance of the individual soldier in war, the Chinese seem to make a virtue out of necessity. Apparently lacking sophisticated armaments were observed—they rely on the man. Air force and infantry officers appeared ignorant of the revolution arising from the development of remotely piloted munitions, the second and third generations of the "smart bombs" of 1972.

Mr. Wu, explaining the deficiencies in modern arms, said: "The People's Liberation Army lags behind the equipment used by the West and the Soviet Union

The MIG-19, mainstay of the Chinese fighter force, would be no match for the faster and more modern MIG-23's, and SU-19's of the Soviet Air Force.

Soviet-Chinese Talk On Border Resuming

PEKING, Nov. 30 (Reuters)—Soviet and Chinese negotiators sat down today for the first time in 18 months to reopen talks on the border dispute.

The Soviet representative, Leonid F. Byichev, who is a Deputy Foreign Minister, arrived Saturday to an unusually warm welcome by his Chinese counterpart, Yu Chao.

Mr. Byichev's return in an attempt to break the deadlock that stalled the talks in May 1975 was seen as part of a wider Soviet plan to begin a fresh dialogue with the post-Mao administration of Chairman Hua Kuo-feng.

Soviet diplomats say they feel China is ready to take a more flexible attitude. The Chinese have stressed that rapprochement beyond relations at the "over-mental level is out of the question."

because industry is backward. We do not have first-grade steel." Foreign diplomatic sources in Peking said the only market where China could buy such steel was Japan. The consensus was that unless it became available, China could not produce tanks, missiles and sophisticated aircraft to match Soviet material. Mr. Wu did not rule out the possibility of "introducing equipment from other countries," but he said that such countries "might not be generous in giving us their equipment" and concluded, "We had better rely on our own efforts."

Differences Over Modernization

There were some signs of differences over modernization. The older officers cling to Mao Tse-tung's emphasis on national self-reliance. Younger officers, concerned over the inadequacies of weapons, refer obliquely to purchases from abroad without identifying the market. Only Britain, France, West Germany, and the United States are potential sources of the weapons the Chinese need.

Chinese estimates of the Soviet forces deployed along the frontier differ somewhat from those of Western intelligence. Mr. Wu said that the total was more than a million and added, "With such an army they could create any kind of trouble any time along our border, but we hope that one million is far from enough to wage an aggressive war." Western estimates are that there are 45 Soviet divisions, perhaps seven of them armored, on the frontier from Central Asia to the Pacific Coast, with a strength of 800,000, including the air force.

On the Chinese side the manpower is divided between the field army and local forces. Chinese sources would not divulge their strength; the best-informed Western analysts believe that they exceed a million, with the Shenyang and Peking Military Regions having 55 regular divisions, 25 militia divisions and 31 independent regiments and northern and northwestern China, the Lanchow and Sinkiang Military Regions, deploying 20 regular divisions, 7 militia divisions and 5 independent regiments.

Mr. Wu said that all the Soviet divisions facing China had manpower at three-quarters of strength or more and all their equipment. Western estimates are that 15 of the Soviet division are in that state of readiness, that another 15 have half to three-quarters of their manpower and all their equipment and that the remaining 15 are at about a third of war strength and have older equipment.

Transfers From Europe

To wage an all-out war against China, Mr. Wu said, the Russians might have to transfer forces from the European front. Otherwise, he said, they would have to muster more troops, which would tip their hand. His confidence on this score is apparently based on reports by Chinese satellites.

The Chinese Air Force, the third largest in the world, is the only Asian air force with nuclear capability. However, personal observation and intelligence reports leave the impression that the quality of the aircraft is poor and that the communications network through which commands are passed to lower echelons is weak.

Chinese officers refused to comment on reports that the air force intended to build an interceptor powered by a Rolls-Royce engine. The British company sold 50 engines to China in December 1975 and agreed to provide the technology for a plant and to assist in producing the engines.

China has 4,100 MIG-17 and MIG-19 interceptors and 50 MIG-21's, some acquired before the break with Moscow in 1960, others Chinese versions. The Chinese have made some minor improvements in the MIG-17, introduced in 1953, and the MIG-19, introduced in 1955, and only the MIG-21s would be able to stay in the same sky with the MIG-23's, the SU-17's and 19's of the contemporary Soviet Air Force.

Question When Unanswered

Asked if China intended to have more sophisticated fighters, Mr. Wu was evasive but gave no indication of when. The bomber force includes 65 Tu-16 intermediate-range craft and 400 IL-28's of medium range. Although capable of carrying nuclear weapons, neither would have much chance against modern fighters armed with air-to-air missiles or against the new generation of Soviet surface-to-air missiles.

Chinese air officers contend that their interceptors and masses of anti-aircraft guns would provide protection in an against Soviet air attack. There is evidence that the Chinese have embarked on a program to expand production of surface-to-air missiles based on the Soviet SA-2, which has a ceiling of 60,000 feet. Some of these missiles, which first appeared in the Soviet Union in 1959, are available for the defense of Peking and the Manchurian industrial region. None were observed around military or civilian airfields.

Chinese military and diplomatic sources stress that the Soviet threat is supplemented by the growing strength of the Soviet Pacific fleet, against which the Chinese can oppose only a navy restricted to provide coastal defense by minesweepers armed with a surface-to-surface missile. Recently its striking range has been extended with new destroyers and frigates.

As for nuclear weapons, the Chinese exploded a four-megaton device in the atmosphere at Lop Nor, in western China, on Nov. 17—the largest Chinese test detected. Nuclear deterrence, they are at one extreme of the Chinese defense effort, with so-called people's war at the other.

Threat Seen as Marginal

Western experts do not believe the Chinese capabilities in ballistic missiles to transport a nuclear device represent more than a marginal threat to the Soviet Union and none at all to the continent United States. China could launch nuclear strikes at targets around its periphery, which means, primarily, Soviet air and naval bases in eastern Siberia.

The emphasis in the nuclear program seems to be on transferring medium-range and intermediate-range ballistic missiles from land to sea bases, using Soviet-built submarines as test platforms. Though the Chinese do not discuss their missile program, there is evidence that the strategic nuclear force includes a small number of liquid-fueled, road-transportable systems patterned on the early Soviet type; a Chinese-built missile with a range of 1,500 miles, and some intercontinental ballistic missiles capable of hitting targets in European Russia.

Western analysts also report that China is trying to develop an ICBM with a 7,000-mile range. There is no information on capability to launch tactical nuclear missiles. Like every other branch of the military requiring advanced techniques, nuclear-missile system must wait upon the fuller modernization of industry.

Tomorrow: The Chinese soldier.

No Shift in Chinese Foreign Policy Is Seen as a Result of Peking Purg

By FOX BUTTERFIELD

HONG KONG, Nov. 30—Analysts here do not believe that the reported political difficulties of China's Foreign Minister, Chiao Kuan-hua, and the recall of six ambassadors in the last few days portend significant changes in foreign policy.

Mr. Chiao's troubles, it appears, stem from accusations of personal involvement with Chiang Ching, Mao Tse-tung's widow, and three other arrested Politburo members now described as sham leftists. Less is known about the reason for the ambassadors' return, but their cases seem to be more part of a shuffle of foreign service personnel than a signal of policy changes.

An editorial yesterday in the party paper, Jenmin Jih Pao, affirmed that position, saying that the Chinese people "will as always firmly adhere to Chairman Mao's revolutionary line and policies in foreign affairs."

One exception may be foreign trade, which Chinese officials have said will increase now that Miss Chiang and her three colleagues have been ousted. They have been accused of interfering with foreign trade by saying that it undermined Mao's policy of self-reliance.

Change in Style Viewed as Possible Some analysts believe Mr. Chiao's absence may make for some difference in the style and tone of foreign policy, particularly in dealings with Washington, since he was a key figure in negotiations that led to the rapprochement in 1972. When President-elect Jimmy Carter takes office, he will be dealing with an entirely new Chinese team.

That Mr. Chiao is suspected of involvement with Miss Chiang and her so-called radical colleagues surprises analysts since the urbane, gregarious 62-year-old Mr. Chiao was a protégé of Chou En-lai, a so-called moderate, who was at the other end of the political spectrum in China.

Communist sources report that Mr. Chiao is under investigation for having sided with Miss Chiang after the disgrace of Teng Hsiao-ping, the Chinese leader purged last April, and because of the reputed friendship between Miss Chiang and Mr. Chiao's wife.

His wife, Chang Han-eh, served as deputy director of the Asian Affairs Department of the Foreign Ministry. According to some diplomatic sources, her father was one of Mao's teachers during his school days in Hunan, and the connection led to later personal ties between the two wives. Miss Chang served as one of Mao's interpreters for several years.

In Bonn, and Huang Hua, at the United Nations. The case of the envoy in Tokyo, Chen Chu, may be different. He had been mentioned in favorable terms in a letter Miss Chiang is said to have given to the year to foreign service personnel.

If Mr. Chiao is in serious trouble, much of the burden of conducting foreign affairs may now fall on Li Hsien-nien, Deputy Prime Minister who has been acting as a kind of unofficial Prime Minister since the nominal holder of that post, Hua Kuo-feng, was appointed party chairman last month. Mr. Li has long experience dealing with foreigners and was a close associate of Chou En-lai.

Peking Legislature Panel Meets

PEKING, Wednesday, Dec. 1 (Reuters)—The standing committee of the National People's Congress, China's nominal Parliament, met last night for the first time since the death of Chairman Mao Tse-tung.

The only decision from the committee that was reported by the official press agency, Hsinhua, was the adoption of a resolution by Chairman Hua Kuo-feng to appoint Teng Ying-chao, the popular widow of the late Prime Minister Chou En-lai, a deputy chairman.

The agency said that the meeting opened in the Great Hall of the People and was presided over by Sun Yat-sen's widow, Goong Ching-ling. Also present were Defense Minister Yeh Chien-yin, thought likely to succeed the late Chou as chairman of the National People's Congress and the Mayor of Peking, Wu Teh, who is also deputy chairman of the congress.

Four Bombs Damage Mexico City Buildings

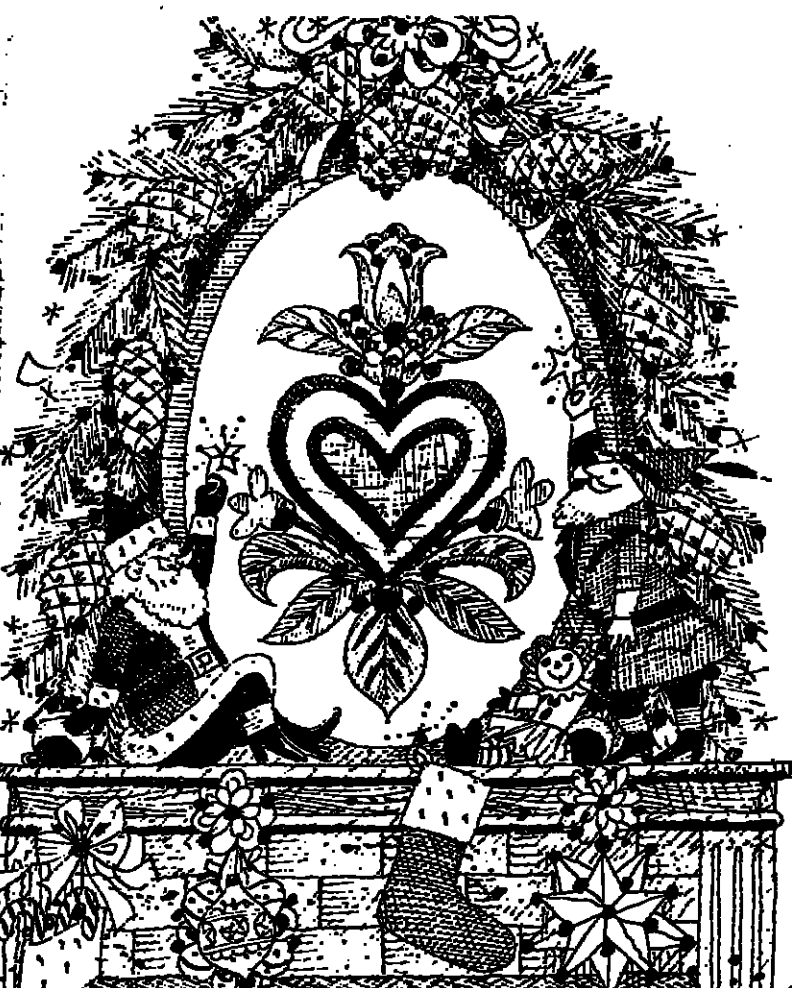

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 30 (AP)—Four explosions damaged commercial buildings in widely separated parts of Mexico City at nearly the same time last night. The police said that at least one person was injured.

One of the explosions was five blocks from the Camino Real Hotel, where foreign delegates to the inauguration tomorrow of President-elect José López Portillo are staying.

"We can't blame any organization or individual for the explosions, but they obviously appear to be related," said Police Commandant Mario Cuello. One blast ripped through a travel agency and damaged the offices of three other companies in an office building in a downtown residential section.

Other explosions occurred at a branch of the privately owned Banco Nacional de Mexico in the northern part of the city, the Johnson & Johnson laboratory in the southern part of the city, and the National Confederation of Chambers of Commerce in the downtown business section.

A police source estimated the total damage at more than $100,000.

Question When Unanswered

Asked if China intended to use sophisticated fighters, Mr. Wu said that he gave no indication of whether the force included intermediate-range craft and long-range bombers. Although they have much chance against nuclear-armed aircraft, he said, they are not yet ready to fight against the new generation of Soviet face-to-air missiles.

Chinese air officers contend that interceptors and masses of anti-aircraft guns would provide protection against Soviet air attack. They contend that the Chinese have a program to expand production of surface-to-air missiles based on the SA-2, which has a ceiling of 70,000 feet. Some of these missiles, which are available in the Soviet Union, are used for the defense of the Manchurian industrial zone. Civilian aircraft were observed around military bases.

Chinese military and diplomatic stress that the Soviet threat is limited by the growing strength of the Soviet Pacific fleet, against which Chinese can oppose only a navy limited to provide coastal defense. Recently his striking force has been extended with new designs of frigates.

As for nuclear weapons, the Chinese exploded a four-megaton device in the atmosphere at Lop Nur in 1967. A test detected, nuclear deterrence is at one extreme of the Chinese effort, with so-called people's war as another.

Threat Seen as Marginal

Western experts do not believe Chinese capabilities in ballistic missiles to be more than a marginal threat to the United States. China could launch clear strikes at targets around the air and naval bases in eastern Siberia. The emphasis in the nuclear program seems to be on transferring range and intermediate-range missiles from land to sea bases, using Soviet-built submarines as test platforms.

Through the Chinese do not disclose the strategic nuclear force, a small number of liquid-fueled, transportable systems patterned after early Soviet systems is believed to have a range of 1,500 miles, and intercontinental ballistic missiles are being tested in European Russia. Western analysts report that China is trying to develop an ICBM with a range of 10,000 miles.

There is information on capital to launch nuclear missiles.

Like every other branch of the military, the nuclear-missile force is walking up the ladder of modernization of industry. Tomorrow, the Chinese soldier.

MEXICO'S NEW CHIEF INHERITING A CRISIS and Problem and Other Urgent Matters Await His Attention After Inauguration Today

By ALAN REDING
Special to The New York Times

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 30—José López Portillo, who begins a six-year term as president of Mexico tomorrow, will inherit an economic and political crisis that demands his immediate attention but has its roots in almost insoluble social problems.

The inauguration of Mr. López Portillo will itself dispel much of the recent economic and political uncertainty, which stems from rumors of an imminent military coup or an attempt by the outgoing President, Luis Echeverría Álvarez, to retain power.

Mr. López Portillo is expected to move quickly to restore basic confidence in the economy by stabilizing the backing of both the Mexican and foreign businessmen and bankers for the austerity program that now seems necessary.

In addition, having remained silent about his plans for the country since his election July 4, Mr. López Portillo can assert his authority, not only over the country but more specifically over the emerging image of President Echeverría. As a result, despite the present crisis, the new President will probably enjoy a brief honeymoon while the country's political forces determine their response to his policies.

Some problems, however, will not wait. Encouraged by President Echeverría's mass expropriation of private farms in Mexico two weeks ago, landless peasants throughout the country have stepped up their campaign for land. Almost daily illegal occupations of property are taking place.

Mr. López Portillo is therefore under great pressure to define his policy toward the rural sector if violence is to be avoided. Farm worker organizations want him to press on with the expropriation and distribution of private farms, while conservatives are demanding an end to land seizures and government agitation among the peasantry.

Discontent within the labor movement over the unemployment and inflation that followed the recent devaluations of the Mexican peso may also come to a climax in new wage demands.

After decreasing a 23 percent nationwide wage increase just two months ago, President Echeverría committed the new government to reviewing wages again on Jan. 1, just at the time that its austerity program should be taking effect.

Personal Style May Help

But if Mr. López Portillo overcomes these two tests of his political strength and skill, many Mexican analysts believe his personal style of government should help bring together many sectors of society that have been driven to positions of near-confrontation by Mr. Echeverría. Unlike the outgoing President, who has used fierce language to cudgel conservatives and mobilize leftists, Mr. López Portillo prefers to win points through hard bargaining in private. "There will be less populism and demagoguery," one of his aides said, "but this doesn't mean he's going to move to the right."

The extent to which the López Portillo government can—or indeed wants to—continue the reformist policies of Mr. Echeverría may depend on such external factors as the willingness of the International Monetary Fund and foreign bankers to continue making unconditional loans to sustain the Mexican economy. Most economists believe that Mr. López Portillo cannot hope to stabilize the peso and control inflation—running at about 20 percent this year—if he continues Mr. Echeverría's policies of massive deficit spending on social reform projects.

The economy is expected to grow by only 2 percent this year, and an even steeper recession is being forecast for next year as the Government tries to cut a balance of payments deficit of $3 billion, reduce its chronic budget deficit and slow the growth of its foreign debt, now $24 billion.

Once state finances are in better shape, however, economic growth can be resumed and some of the fruits of President Echeverría's vast investment in industrial activities will be harvested. For example, the last six years, oil reserves have tripled, oil production has doubled and oil exports have begun, while the steel, petrochemical and electricity industries have all doubled their capacities.

An expanding economy may also enable Mr. López Portillo to carry out one of his main goals—a major fiscal reform switching the emphasis from indirect to direct taxation and the load from the middle to the upper classes.

The expectation that the new Government can restore the confidence of the private sector in the economy, however, does not extend to a belief that it can resolve the economic contradictions and social injustices that are deepening the political divisions in the country.

The sheer growth of the country's population in the next six years—from 82 million to 74 million—will spawn problems that will inevitably have a major political impact.

Unemployment and underemployment, which now affect about half the work force of 16 million, is bound to increase, even in percentage terms, since the creation of new jobs is small compared with the 800,000 youths entering the job market each year.

Landless Swell the Cities

The low productivity of the agricultural sector—per capita food production fell by an annual average of 2.4 percent during the Echeverría regime—means that the army of four million landless migrant workers will continue to grow, spilling hundreds of thousands into city slums or into the United States in search of employment.

The rapid urbanization of the country is itself a serious problem. The centralization of government and industry around Mexico City has already turned the capital into a metropolis of 12 million people, with chronic air and noise pollution, inadequate drainage and housing and impossible traffic problems.

Yet, according to official estimates, if current growth patterns are maintained, Mexico City will soon be the largest urban agglomeration in the world, its population exceeding 30 million by the year 2000.

Waste of Resources Imperils Man, World Wildlife Conference Is Told

By GLADWIN HILL
Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 30—Headed, at least in protocol, by King Carl XVI Gustaf of Sweden, some 800 people from 35 nations are assembled here nominally to discuss protection of endangered species of animals and plants.

But the dominant theme emanating from the fourth international World Wildlife Fund Conference is that the most imperiled of species, unless he mends his ways, is man.

From S. Dillon Ripley, the august head of the Smithsonian Institution, to Jack Munday, the ruffled left-wing Australian labor leader, a half-dozen speakers have hammered at the message that, particularly in the advanced industrialized countries, wasteful consumption of energy and other resources must give way to conservation or invite dire troubles.

"It's a fragile earth. We must recognize its fragility and stop breaking it. Disaster lies ahead unless we change course," said Sir Peter Scott of Britain, chairman of the organization.

Rain Forests Destroyed

He cited as one prime example the galloping destruction of tropical rain forests, a major source of atmospheric moisture, around the world.

"They are an integral part of the world's life-support system," Sir Peter said. "A tree will transpire 200 gallons of water a day into the air, a small forest 4,000 gallons a day. That is three times the evaporation rate from the oceans."

"These forests have been stable for 60 million years, up to now. Now they are disappearing, under the various incursions of man, at a worldwide rate of 50 acres a minute, day and night."

Dr. Raymond F. Dasmann, senior ecologist for the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, said that "Humanity is rapidly draining the earth of those materials which it requires for survival, and carries on with a childlike trust that its two great magicians, science and technology, will perform the necessary rituals to change a finite planet into an infinite cornucopia."

"The industrialized Western world, led by the United States," he added, "is not only consuming more than a lion's share of the earth's resources, but believes it has some inherent right to do so."

"Despite the obvious handwriting on the wall, concerning the rapid depletion of the world's petroleum, more people are driving more automobiles more miles than ever before. Despite fisheries depletion, more people are eating more fish than ever before. Despite the energy waste in converting grain to beef or pork, more people are eating more meat than ever."

"We are hooked like junkies, dependent on the drug of wasteful consumption," Mr. Munday, the former construction trades union leader from Australia who originated the "Green Ban" labor boycott on environmentally controversial projects, said. "We have witnessed in the industrialized countries an enormous increase in the manufacture of consumer goods, many of which are absolutely unnecessary and devastatingly disastrous in the depletion of the natural resources. There must be a cessation of producing goods, often with built-in obsolescence, whose main criterion is the maximizing of private profit."

Disparity in Resources

A former secretary of the Australian Communist Party, Mr. Munday said he did not consider the Soviet Union or any of the world's present socialist regimes to be satisfactory from an environmental standpoint. He called for "a new form of socialism, with an ecological heart."

Conference discussions have constantly turned to the gulf between the advanced nations and the third world in respect to resources.

"Most of the ardent conservationists live in the first world, the world of the 'have' nations, and therefore are suspect to the rest," Mr. Ripley said.

The Smithsonian official called for involvement in global conservation efforts of the "second world—the socialist states, whose influence can be equal to our money, and whose active participation would go a long way to rationalize the apparent disparity in motivation between the 'have' and 'have not' nations."

Monte Canfield, energy and minerals director of the General Accounting Office, a Congressional investigatory arm, said: "The 'have' nations must get their house in order. The United States has not done very well in this regard. We have made only token justice towards such vital programs as increased conservation, increased research and development on solar energy and other renewable resources."

The 15-year-old World Wildlife Fund, which now has branches in 26 nations, has raised and disbursed about $25 million on 1,534 conservation projects in 80 countries, working in collaboration with the International Union for the Conservation of Nature, also based in Morges, Switzerland.

The fund's executive director, Dr. Fritz Vollmar, reported that it had built up a capital fund of $12 million, the income from which now covered its overhead and many of its project grants. He said that $2 million had been raised so far on a project started in 1974 for conservation of tropical rain forests.

G. A. O. Says Ford Plutonium View Perils Future of Breeder Reactor

By DAVID BURNHAM
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—President Ford's recent policy statement on the dangers of plutonium have raised doubts about the development of an experimental reactor that has been hailed as the answer to the nation's energy crisis, the General Accounting Office said today.

The report by the investigating and auditing arm of Congress concerned the liquid metal fast breeder reactor, the largest single energy research project ever undertaken by the United States.

Government and industry energy planners have repeatedly expressed hopes that the breeder reactor—which so far has cost $3 billion—can be developed into an essentially inexhaustible source of energy to replace the increasingly scarce and expensive oil and natural gas.

But the G.A.O.'s second major report on the breeder, while avoiding any flat predictions, posed a number of questions about whether this goal would be achieved.

A major new possible constraint on the breeder, the agency said, was President Ford's Oct. 28 statement on the Administration's new policy toward the peaceful use of nuclear energy and the related proliferation of nuclear weapons.

In his statement, Mr. Ford said that "the reprocessing and recycling of plutonium should not proceed unless there is sound reason to conclude the world community can effectively overcome the associated risks of proliferation."

The President said that reprocessing—the removal of plutonium from used reactor fuel—should no longer be regarded "as a necessary and inevitable step in the nuclear fuel cycle, and that we should pursue reprocessing and recycling in the future only if they are found to be consistent with our international objectives."

The G.A.O. report said that the President's statements on reprocessing "creates doubts as to whether the liquid metal fast breeder reactor will become a viable energy source because reprocessing is an indispensable prerequisite for L.M.F.B.R. commercialization."

During the recent campaign, President-elect Jimmy Carter made several speeches and statements that indicated that his Administration's policy in attempting to deal with the proliferation of nuclear weapons would be at least as strict as that proposed by President Ford just before the election.

Financial Uncertainties Cited
A second question raised by the General Accounting Office report concerned what the agency called the "financial uncertainties" of building the 128 breeder reactors that the Energy Research and Development Administration is planning.

The report estimated that the total capital costs for these 128 plants and the required support facilities would be about $150 billion in 1974 dollars. Comparable costs for building the same number and same size of coal-fired generators would be about $95 billion. The same number and same size of conventional light water reactors was estimated as about $128 billion.

Despite the higher initial costs, the G.A.O. said that the breeder reactor could "retain an economic advantage because it promises comparatively lower operating costs due to its ability to produce more fuel than it consumes."

Analysis by Investors
The agency said that investors were increasingly wary of investing in operations that required huge amounts of capital in relation to the income they brought in.

"Furthermore," the report continued, "bond ratings of electric utilities are declining. Between 1968 and 1974, 21 utilities were upgraded and at least 59 downgraded, in part, because the utilities have not been allowed by their regulatory bodies to include all their costs in their rates. Downgrading increases difficulty in attracting investment capital, especially on a favorable terms."

The agency said that another set of serious difficulties would be posed in resolving complex conflicts among dozens of institutions about the breeder before the experimental reactor can be successfully developed.

At least 33 Congressional committees, 65 subcommittees and 29 executive branch agencies share responsibility for the development of the breeder and associated energy policies, the report said. In addition, the utilities, the hardware manufacturers, the regulatory agencies and the public interest groups must also be persuaded that the breeder reactor can operate safely and economically.

"Obtaining private sector support will be difficult, however, because of current uncertainties centering on future demand for electricity, the ultimate cost of power from commercial breeder power plants, availability of capital and the entire future of the nuclear option," the G.A.O. said in its conclusion.

If the existing uncertainties concerning the safety, safeguards and environmental effects are resolved within the next few years, the start of a program to build commercial breeder reactors "by the mid-1980s is feasible," the report also said.

EX-OFFICIAL INDICTED IN TEAMSTERS' LOAN

A Former Manager of Pension Fund Charged With Accepting a Bribe of $200,000 From Borrower

By PAUL DELANEY
Special to The New York Times

CHICAGO, Nov. 30—A former official of the teamster union's principal pension fund was indicted here today on a charge of receiving a $200,000 bribe two years ago.

Alvin Baron, 51 years old, formerly of Schaumburg, a suburb of Chicago, and now of Las Vegas, was accused of soliciting and receiving $200,000 from Foy Bryant, a cemetery owner in Fair Oaks, Calif., who received a $1.3 million loan from the Central States, Southeast and Southwest Areas Pension Fund of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. Mr. Baron was asset manager of the fund between 1973 and 1974.

The nine-count indictment, returned by a Federal grand jury, represents the biggest legal action involving an official of the fund since the conviction of the former teamster president, James R. Hoffa, in 1964. Mr. Hoffa was convicted of mail and wire fraud in connection with use of the fund.

The indictment was announced by Samuel K. Skinner, United States Attorney for the Northern District of Illinois. The indictment of Mr. Baron arose from an investigation conducted by the United States Attorney's office here. This investigation was separate from the joint Labor Department-Justice Department investigation of the pension fund. Efforts to include the Baron case in the larger investigation had been resisted successfully by the Chicago office.

In addition to the bribery charge, Mr. Baron was accused in five of the counts of committing wire fraud by defrauding the fund, "its board of trustees and the union members who are the beneficiaries of the fund by causing the board to approve the loan and by failing to disclose his receipt of the kickback."

In two other counts, Mr. Baron was accused of using the mails "to carry out his scheme to defraud." The ninth count charged that he understated his income on his tax return for 1974.

The teamsters' pension fund has been under fire for years for lending money to associates of organized crime figures.

Alvin Baron

New Federal laws and other Government controls have been instituted in attempts to deal with the continuing problem. Under the increased Federal pressure, the Union has attempted to reorganize the fund.

Officials of the reorganized fund had no comment after today's indictment, other than to note that the investigation that led to the action was prompted by their turning over material to investigators from the Postal Service and Internal Revenue Service. Mr. Skinner said that the officials had cooperated fully.

The indictment said that Mr. Baron was responsible for the processing and the administration of loans made by the pension fund.

"As asset manager, Baron occupied a fiduciary position with the pension fund and was prohibited from accepting fees, kickbacks, commissions, money or things of value from borrowers in connection with pension fund loans," the first count stated.

Nevertheless, the document continued, Mr. Baron "knowingly and willfully did solicit and agree to receive from Foy Bryant a fee, kickback, to wit: $200,000, because of and with the intent to be influenced with respect to his actions, decisions and other duties relating to questions and matters concerning said welfare and pension plan, to wit: a request by Mount Vernon Memorial Park for a $1.3 million loan."

Other Charges Outlined
The wire counts charged that Mr. Baron used the telephone to call long distance to promote the scheme and the wires to receive and transmit money under the scheme. He was accused in the mail fraud counts of corresponding with Mr. Bryant.

The tax count charged that Mr. Baron reported only $96,264 adjusted gross income "whereas the defendant then, and there well knew and believed that his adjusted gross income during the calendar year 1974 was substantially in excess of that amount."

Mr. Bryant owned the Mount Vernon Memorial Park cemetery in Fair Oaks. His loan was approved Dec. 12, 1974. The maximum sentences for the charges brought against Mr. Bryant are three years in prison and a $10,000 fine in the bribery charge, five years and $1,000 in the wire fraud charges and three years and $5,000 in the tax charge.

Mr. Baron, who was a close associate of Mr. Hoffa, resigned his $100,000-a-year post last year at the request of the pension fund trustees. He was brought to the fund by the union's former president and was regarded as powerful and influential figure in the fund during his nine years with it.

Discrepancies were discovered at a meeting of the trustees in April, 1975. The meeting was attended by Mr. Baron. Stanley Collins, Alameda County administrator, said attorneys for Schoenfelds believe they have "a confidant representing the two brothers."

Hughes's Kin Challenge Claim to Inheritance

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 30 (UPI)—Cousins of Howard R. Hughes were judge to declare two reputed adult children of the late billionaire's illegitimate to inherit any of his $2.5 billion estate.

A Superior Court suit was filed today by Barbara Cameron of Los Angeles and Agnes Roberts and Elsie DeWitt, both of Cleveland, all grandchildren of Rupert Hughes, paternal uncle of late billionaire.

The suit alleged that Avis H. McIntyre of Alabama and Ruth E. of Palm Springs, Calif., were legally adopted by Rupert Hughes, content that they are the child of Rupert Hughes's second wife and their stepfather promised to adopt.

Malcolm Smith, who is an attorney for the three, said a tentative settlement of the estate was signed last July 16 by surviving Hughes relatives leaving them 25 percent of the $2.5 billion fortune. The remainder goes to Hughes's aunt, Annette Gano Lutz.

The agreement provides that all sons who say they are paternal will receive any inheritance from the estate set aside for paternal relatives. The more paternal relatives are recognized, the smaller each share will be.

Two Begin Prison Term in Hearst Contempt Case

ALLENWOOD, Pa., Nov. 30—Jay Weiner and Phillip K. Shinnick for contempt for refusing to cooperate with a Federal grand jury investigating the Patricia Hearst case, began terms of possibly eight months today.

The two surrendered to United States marshals at the Allenwood prison, a minimum security facility, to serve prison sentences handed down last week by Federal District Judge William Nealon in Scranton.

Mr. Shinnick, 34, of Highland Park, N.J., a former instructor at Rutgers University's Livingston College, was for refusing to provide the pen samples of hair and handwriting.

Mr. Weiner, 22, a freelance writer from Philadelphia, was guilty last Sept. 23 of refusing to before the grand jury.

Majority in Poll Favor More Nuclear Plants

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—While cent of a sampling of the American favor speeding up the construction nuclear power plants, 67 percent that the disposal of radioactive is a major problem, according to a survey conducted by Louis Harris and Associates.

The survey, based on interviews of 1,497 families, 309 neighbors of plants and 214 government and business leaders, was conducted for Services Inc., a New York-based consulting firm. The Harris firm did a study for Ebasco in 1975, thus providing a comparison of changing public attitudes about energy and nuclear power last year.

The 1976 survey found that 64 percent of those questioned feel there will be a serious energy shortage 10 years now. In the 1975 survey, only 53 percent said they felt that way.

The survey found 61 percent of questioned favor building more nuclear power plants as a way of solving the energy problem, about the same as the 63 percent who held this view last year.

The survey also found that 64 percent of those questioned feel there will be a serious energy shortage 10 years now. In the 1975 survey, only 53 percent said they felt that way.

No Big Tropical Storms in Caribbean in 1976

MIAMI, Nov. 30 (UPI)—The high season ended today, marking 1976 of two years during this century there were no named tropical storms in the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean. The only other stormless year both areas this century was in 1966.

In all, there was a total of eight storms—six of them hurricanes—this season, which began last June 1. The National Hurricane Center said this compares with an average named storms and six hurricanes over the last several decades.

Hurricane Belle and tropical storm Dottie were the only storms to strike the United States.

Belle hugged the East Coast as it moved north from Cape Hatteras and on Long Island and moved into southern England and the night of Aug. 9, there were five deaths from the storm. Dottie were estimated at $250 million.

Tropical storm Dottie moved near Charleston, S.C., the night of Oct. 20. It was a relatively weak storm, there were no deaths or damage.

Lawyer Seeks to Retire From Chowchilla Case

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 30 (UPI)—William Gager, an attorney for two brothers charged with the mass Chowchilla school bus kidnapping last July, said today that he planned to withdraw as defending the older brother, Ja Schoenfeld, 24 years old.

Mr. Schoenfeld, his brother Rich, 22, and Fred Woods, 24, all from west suburban San Francisco families, are accused of abducting 26 schoolchildren their bus driver from the farm community in central California.

A hearing on motions in the case, including a plea to change the site of trial, is scheduled tomorrow before Alameda County Superior Court Judge Alan Lindsay in Oakland. The case moved there from Madera County, where Chowchilla is situated, but Mr. Wood's lawyer, Herbert Yarnowitz, wants switched again, possibly to San Francisco. Stanley Collins, Alameda County administrator, said attorneys for Schoenfelds believe they have "a confidant representing the two brothers."

Black Cleric Says He Won't Return to Carter Church

By WAYNE KING
Special to The New York Times

ATLANTA, Nov. 30—The Rev. Clennon King, the black minister whose application for membership resulted in the dropping of the 11-year-old ban on attendance and membership by blacks at Jimmy Carter's Baptist church in Plains, Ga., said today that he had no intention of returning to the church until the question of his membership had been resolved.

In a telephone interview from Albany, Ga., Mr. King also said that there was no political motivation in his attempt to join the Plains Baptist Church. And, replying to reports that he was mentally incompetent, he said: "I'm not critical of people who say I'm mentally unstable. I give that impression. They say I'm crazy and I suppose I am, but the treatment I've received has contributed to that."

President-elect Carter and others have contended that Mr. King was "politically motivated" in seeking admission to the church. He applied for membership in a letter on Oct. 26, and on Oct. 31, a Sunday, two days before the Presidential election, he was turned away from a locked church at which services had been canceled.

The church congregation, with the urging of Mr. Carter, subsequently voted to rescind a ban adopted by the congregation in 1965 that barred blacks from attendance and membership, and said it would take Mr. King's application for membership under advisement.

The church set up a so-called "watch-care committee," common in Southern Baptist churches, to consider the application and make a recommendation to the congregation.

It has been widely reported that Mr. King had a history of mental illness. He was put into a mental institution briefly in Mississippi in 1958 after he attempted to enroll in that institution, which was then segregated.

Mr. King said today that he had tried to join the Plains church solely because of a sermon delivered by the church's pastor, the Rev. Bruce Edwards, in which Mr. Edwards said that the church should be open to anyone regardless of race. He noted that Mr. Carter had said the same thing.

Mr. King said he had read Mr. Edwards' sermon in an Albany newspaper, and had applied for membership soon afterward.

"He said that differences in race should not be a requirement for church membership," Mr. King said. "He also said difference in scriptural interpretation should not be a barrier. But he blew my mind when he said that differences in religious beliefs should not be a barrier to Christian fellowship," Mr. King added.

"I thought that Jesus could not have said it any better. I thought he and Mr. Carter, his ace member, said, 'Come on, Negroes.' So I said, 'This nigger Clennon is gonna come up there and see what you're putting down.'"

Waiting for a Welcome
But Mr. King said today that he did not intend to go back until they get this resolved. He added: "I am waiting for Mr. Edwards to do what he said he would do. He will either tell me I am welcome or not."

"I feel I have made a big monkey of myself," Mr. King continued. "I have become so distracted by the Plains activities that I have neglected my own activities." Mr. King is pastor of the Divine Light Mission, a non-denominational church in Albany.

Whatever his motives, the decision by Mr. King to seek membership in Mr. Carter's church is not his first public struggle with racial issues.

The allegations of mental illness that has been ascribed to him stems in part from his incarceration in a mental institution in Mississippi in 1958. He was ordered there by a Mississippi judge because he tried to desegregate the University of Mississippi at Oxford. No black entered the university until four years later, when James H. Meredith was enrolled. Mr. Meredith was backed by Federal troops after a night-long riot that left three persons dead.

Mr. King, then 37 years old, tried to enroll without legal help or Federal assistance in June 1958 for a summer session. "He walked in the front door and they carried him out the back," recalled a Mississippi newspaper who wrote about the incident.

Mr. King, a former professor at Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College in Alcorn, Miss., made known his intention by letter to enroll in the summer session in pursuit of a Ph.D. degree.

When he tried to enroll, he was carried out bodily and held incommunicado for 20 hours by the state police. A lunacy warrant was drawn by the Chancery Court in Oxford, and he was ordered committed to the state mental hospital in Whitfield, Miss., for observation.

Mr. King was seized on June 5, 1958. On June 14, his brother, C. B. King, a leading civil rights lawyer in Albany, Ga., filed a writ contending that the minister was being illegally restrained. Four days later, Mr. King was declared sane and released.

Mr. King had also been the subject of a student protest at Alcorn College, where he taught history, because of a series of newspaper articles he wrote criticizing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and advocating segregation. When he left the college, he was highly regarded by white segregationists.

Later, in 1958, Mr. King wrote a letter to President Eisenhower, declaring his intention to enroll one of his children in a segregated school. The attempt was not made, however, because his wife refused to turn the child over to him.

Mr. King subsequently moved to California, where he was later arrested and charged with nonsupport of his family. He spent four years in prison before the State Supreme Court overturned his conviction.

Senior Korean Intelligence Agent Defects and Aids U.S. Investigation

identified special agent named Hancho C. Kim, a businessman in nearby Lanhan, Md. The role of Hancho C. Kim, who could not be reached for comment, is evidently to enhance Korea's image in this country.

Mr. Kim contributed a glowing article entitled "Park's Shining Korean Camelot," praising the rule of President Park Chung Hee, which ran on the op-ed page of The New York Times in January 1975.

The defection of Kim Sang Keun, who was listed in the diplomatic register as a counselor of embassy and was the number two man in the K.C.I.A. organization here, has reportedly thrown the Korean Embassy into turmoil.

A Korean Embassy spokesman had no comment until Ambassador Hahn Pyong Choon, who is out of Washington, could be reached. State Department officials concerned with Korean affairs were not available to comment on what impact Mr. Kim's defection and testimony might have on United States relations with Korea. These relations already have been strained by allegations that the Korean bribery and lobbying was personally ordered by President Park.

Korean diplomats have told friends that they were already "worried sick" over the disclosures of alleged bribery, illegal lobbying and intimidation of Koreans living in this country. The diplomats said that they were being shunned socially; that Government and Congressional contacts were declining appointments and telephone calls, and that they feared decreasing support for continued military and economic aid.

When Mr. Kim disappeared on Thanksgiving, the day he was to leave for Seoul, the embassy staff was mobilized to fan out looking for him. The K.C.I.A. reportedly sent a senior official from Seoul in an unsuccessful effort to persuade him, through his wife, to return to Korea. Mrs. Kim and their children are also under Federal protection.

Mr. Kim had reportedly been ordered home to limit the F.B.I. investigation of the alleged bribery and illegal lobbying and to take the blame for the exposure of the K.C.I.A.'s operation before a Federal grand jury and in the American press.

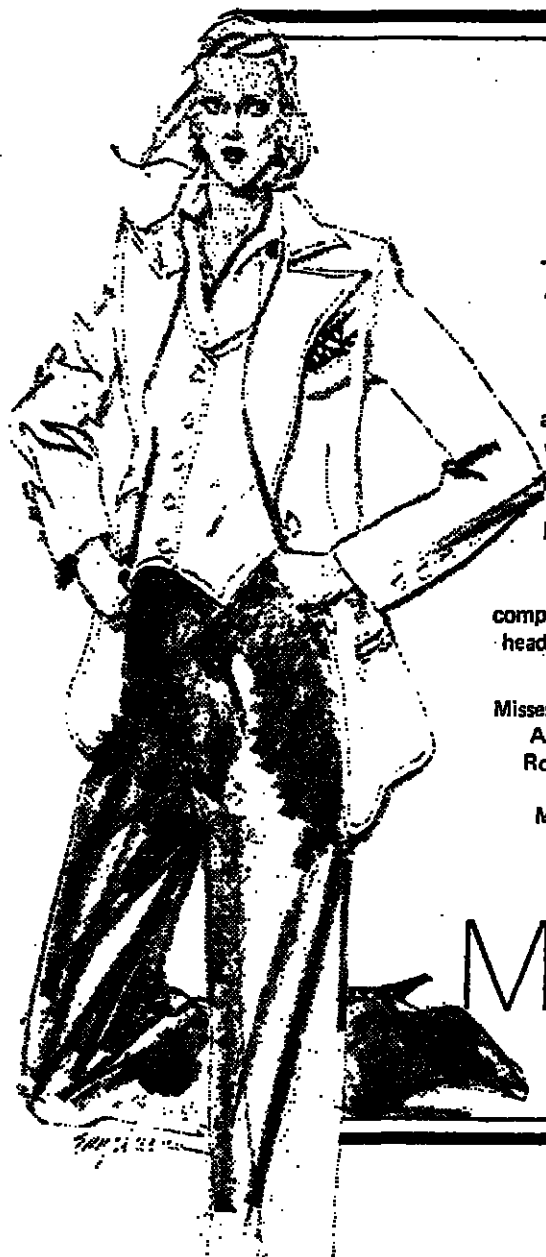

He had been responsible for that operation, reporting directly to Yang Do Won, the number three man in the K.C.I.A. headquarters in Seoul. Mr. Yang was dismissed about a month ago, according to Seoul press reports.

In addition, Maj. Gen. Kim Hung Wan, the acknowledged K.C.I.A. station chief here, and many other officers in the embassy and consulates around the United States have been ordered home to head off just the sort of questioning Mr. Kim is currently undergoing.

Although diplomats or intelligence agents posing as diplomats are immune to such questioning or appearances in court, they can give information voluntarily as Mr. Kim is doing. Whether he will be asked to testify before the grand jury or in court if indictments are handed down could not be determined.

But it seems likely that the Justice Department will request testimony in return for the protection and asylum accorded Mr. Kim and his family. The investigators have emphasized from the start the need not only to find out what has happened but also to have credible witnesses to make a case in court.

Mr. Kim has been in Washington since 1970, when the Korean bribery and lobbying are reported to have started in response to the withdrawal of 20,000 of the 64,000 American soldiers stationed in Korea. The Korean Government feared a lessening of the American commitment to Korea and set out to shore up its position.

Ford Is Asked to Help Congressional Inquiry on Actions of South Korea

By RICHARD D. LYONS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—Leaders of the House ethics committee have asked President Ford for Justice Department assistance in undertaking a Congressional investigation of South Korean influence-peddling on Capitol Hill.

The request by the committee's Democratic chairman and ranking Republican member has, in turn, spurred demands for an investigation by five other House leaders of both parties, thus making such an inquiry almost a certainty.

The formal request was made a week in a letter sent to the White House by Representative John J. Flynt Jr., chairman of the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, and Representative Floyd D. Spence of South Carolina, the ranking Republican.

It came 18 months after the Justice Department started its own investigation which it has thus far questioned several dozen persons, including 14 present or former representatives.

Others Expressing Support

The Flynt-Spence letter, when disclosed yesterday, prompted supporting requests for investigation from Representatives Rhodes of Arizona, the minority leader; John J. McFall of California, the majority whip; John Brademas of Indiana, chief deputy majority whip; Robert Michel of Illinois, the minority whip; and Phillip Burton of California, chairman of the House Democratic Caucus.

Mr. Flynt said if the White House did not respond to his request in the next few months, he would make the same request of Jimmy Carter after his inauguration as President on Jan. 20.

According to Mr. Spence, an investigation is needed because "there's so much smoke there almost has to be fire."

For months there have been disclosures that the South Korean Government had attempted to influence legislation favorable to the regime of President Park Chung Hee through campaign contributions, gifts, dinners and junkets to Seoul by Congressmen.

But it is less clear how successful the South Korean operations were since support of South Korea has been a cornerstone of United States policy in the Far East for 30 years.

Representative Brademas noted that there had been allegations that the South Korean Government had sought to influence policy in both the Nixon and Ford Administrations and that the Central Intelligence Agency may have given the Seoul Government support in this regard.

"We've got to find out the facts," Mr. Brademas said in putting himself in support of a Congressional inquiry of both the allegations about Congress and the executive branch of Government.

Mr. Brademas received $4,650 in campaign contributions from Park Tong Sun, the central figure in the allegations about influence peddling. However, Mr. Brademas reported the contributions when they were made in 1972 and 1974.

Mr. Rhodes, the minority leader, said, "There have been enough instances of some pretty flagrant conduct on the part of people who have some connection with the South Korean Government."

"It is well within the purview of the ethics committee to conduct an investigation," he said, adding that it could also be undertaken by the General Accounting

Office, the investigations arm of Congress.

Representative Albert H. Quie, Republican of Minnesota and an ethics committee member, also suggested that the G.A.O. conduct the inquiry. He questioned the need for the committee to assemble a big staff, as it did with the investigation of the unauthorized publication of the report of the House Select Committee on Intelligence. That investigation cost more than $200,000 and did not find the source of the disclosure.

Mr. Quie said he had not known about the letter to the President. Mr. Flynt said that the members of the committee had scattered during the Congressional recess and that he had not had the opportunity to discuss it with all of them.

Could Involve Ethics Code

Mr. Flynt said that the investigation, if it is conducted by the ethics committee, would probably delve into the question of whether either the code of ethics of the House or the code of ethics for Federal employees had been violated by the acceptance of cash, gifts, parties and trips to Seoul.

With the reluctance of the House to investigate itself, the cooperation of the Justice Department was solicited to allow the committee to draw on the information it has gathered during the last 18 months. To do so would save the committee both time and money if it did start an investigation.

Agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation have been questioning present and former members of the House, while other persons have appeared as witnesses before a Federal grand jury here that has been taking evidence in the case.

In the last two years, more than 60 senators and representatives visited South Korea and were entertained lavishly.

Representative Lester L. Wolff, Democrat of Nassau County, said of one visit there that there were so many flowers in his hotel room that "it looked like a funeral parlor."

Junkets at the expense of foreign governments are prohibited by Federal law, but some governments have funneled money to private foundations that in turn paid the expenses.

"You kind of smell a mouse with all the invitations they sent out," Mr. Michel said. He said it was immaterial to him who conducted the inquiry.

Mr. McFall said through a spokesman that he would "welcome an investigation." In the last month Mr. McFall has acknowledged receiving $4,000 in contributions from persons here who have been accused of being South Korean operatives.

According to Mr. Burton, "the House is dithering head on." He said he thought such an inquiry should be undertaken either by the ethics committee or the G.A.O.

He noted that the House Subcommittee on International Organizations of the International Relations Committee, which is headed by Representative Donald M. Fraser, Democrat of Minnesota, had originally brought to light the allegations of Korean influence peddling during hearings last year.

But the latest hearing was last June, and the subcommittee has not taken into account the more recent disclosures of South Korean attempts to influence United States policy.

Back to the Brink? . . .

Just when things were beginning to look up for this fiscally overextended city—with mandated economies in the budget largely on target and cash flow exceeding expectations—New York again faces the prospect of being driven to the brink of bankruptcy—and beyond. That ominous possibility must be faced in the wake of Monday's meeting of city and state officials with representatives of leading local banks and the municipal pension funds, and with Arthur Richenthal, the attorney for the Flushing National Bank who won a court suit overturning a state-imposed moratorium on more than $1 billion in city notes.

Richenthal's reading of the court ruling as a mandate for full payment, an interpretation that has been supported by Comptroller Goldin among others. Nor can it be reasonably disputed that the banks and pension funds are already heavily committed to city and M.A.C. securities. But it is also beyond dispute that banks, the pension funds—and the municipal employees they represent—and Mr. Richenthal's clients have a vital stake in the solvency of New York, without which their current claims on the city could become worthless. That overriding common interest in the city's survival must not be forgotten as negotiations continue—even as a new question was raised yesterday by institutional holders of short-term notes who also threatened to demand repayment.

. . . The Federal Role

New York's latest fiscal crisis could not have struck at a less opportune time. Immobilization in Washington caused by the change in Administrations compels the city to fall back on its own overburdened resources to meet an unforeseen $1 billion obligation that would be staggering in the best of times. This does not mean there is not a role for the incoming Carter Administration to play in the resolution of New York's current difficulties. Although state and city officials have taken pains to try to avoid confronting President-elect Carter with a New York crisis just as he assumes office, the fact is that such a crisis looms.

what would be most helpful right now is a psychological boost—a strong commitment from the President and leaders of Congress to move quickly on programs of urban relief, such as stepped-up "countercyclical" aid, an increased Federal contribution to welfare costs and some kind of loan guarantees. Although promises won't in themselves solve New York's current $1-billion problem, they could contribute to a local solution by offering assurances to participating parties that their sacrifices will not be in vain—that the city will soon receive the additional Federal help it must have for ultimate survival. It should not be overlooked that New York does not stand alone. The National League of Cities meeting in Denver this week has warned that many large cities throughout the country are in trouble and in need of immediate Federal assistance. The New York crisis merely serves to underscore the urgency of this wider national problem.

Legacy for Mr. Lopez

When he takes the oath as President of Mexico today, José López Portillo may reflect on the maxim: "I can defend myself against my enemies; but God protect me from my friends." Retiring President Luis Echeverría Alvarez surprised everyone last year by picking Mr. López to be his successor; but he has bequeathed his lifelong friend staggering problems: political unrest, 20 percent inflation, 30 percent unemployment, huge budget and trade deficits and the country's worst financial crisis in 65 years. Mr. Echeverría's Administration is not entirely to blame for a depression that afflicts many countries in greater or lesser degree. But it cannot escape responsibility for policies that increased the budget deficit 600 percent in six years, expanded the number of state-owned enterprises eight-fold, and cut the value of the peso by over half in the last three months without achieving anticipated benefits, especially increased exports.

spending and imposing austerity while conserving as many Echeverría reforms as possible. In short, Mr. López must walk a political tightrope, conscious of the need to recreate a climate for business expansion and capital investment, but aware that too abrupt a retreat could bring him under attack by the man who picked him to be President. In his inaugural he can in good conscience pay tribute to the accomplishments of the Echeverría Government; but as he sets out on the tightrope he must wonder why his predecessor and friend felt it necessary so late in his term to put so many additional obstacles on the course.

December

The arrival of December means the definite end to autumn. Even the leaf-rustle of the November wind whisking October's brilliance along the country road is muted as the leaves settle down. The early clamor of crows no longer starts the day, and the jays go about their business for the most part in blue silence. The chickadee is the most vocal bird in the dooryard, and his brief song is interrupted by the tap-tap-tap of his beak as he cracks a sunflower seed. In the country house, the fly-buzz and wasp-flutter in the attic have quieted down, the insects dead or dormant. The barred owl hoots in the night, and from time to time the fine-spun yapping of a red fox is heard. But their voices only punctuate the silence, which lies deep in the rural valley where frogs, only a few weeks ago, thumped the darkness. Brooks are quiet, their shallow waters beginning to clog with ice. The woodchuck sleeps. Chipmunks drowse in their fluff-lined nests, and squirrels go chatterless in the treetops. December comes, a time of earth sounds, the moan of the chilling wind, the swish of driven snow. Sometimes the countryman awakens in the night and thinks he hears the faint groan of rocks restless in their aged beds, nudged by the slow expansion of silent frost. Sometimes he hears the slow crunch of ice on the pond. December comes, and winter.

Ferment in the Warsaw Pact

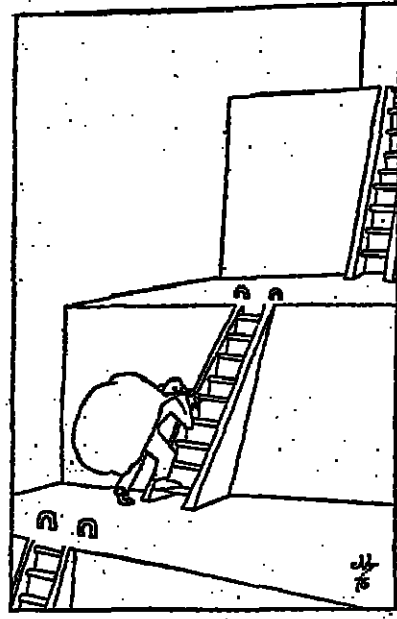

Leonid I. Brezhnev's state visits to Belgrade and Bucharest in recent weeks suggest that the Kremlin is preoccupied with Eastern European problems these days. Now the communiqué of the Political Consultative Session of the Warsaw Treaty Organization provides some clues to the nature of Soviet concern in this area. The most important clue is the announcement of the creation of a committee of Warsaw Pact foreign ministers and a unified secretariat, for the purpose of "continually improving the mechanism of political collaboration." When the Warsaw Pact began, political collaboration could be assured by a series of telephone calls from Moscow to the respective satellite capitals. Now the situation has altered enough so that it is felt necessary to set up a formal mechanism into which real life might yet be infused.

in such nations as Britain and France become known in Eastern Europe. More and more, intelligent and increasingly well-informed East Europeans must question the reality of the supposed Western threat, which has always been used to justify Soviet domination and the existence of the Warsaw Pact itself. Moreover, many of the Eastern European countries have internal tensions that must lead the Kremlin to wonder whether it will have to face future challenges such as Hungary posed in 1956 and Czechoslovakia in 1968. This ferment is all the more troublesome, because Eastern European dissidents can point to the Helsinki Declaration's provisions for freer and more numerous contacts throughout Europe, which all the Warsaw Pact nations endorsed. In East Germany, for example, there has been an upsurge of demands for the right to visit or emigrate to West Germany, while the East German regime has also found it necessary to exile its most prominent folk singer, Wolf Biermann. In Poland, memories are still fresh of the spontaneous worker resistance a few months ago that brought Government capitulation on planned price increases. Now there is rising agitation over the punishment then meted out to the dissident workers. On the surface, Eastern Europe is still relatively calm, but underneath powerful forces seeking greater national independence are hard at work, to Moscow's discomfort and dismay.

Letters to the Editor

G.O.P.: 'Neither Dead Nor About to Die'

To the Editor: Several post-election analysts have reported that the Republican Party is on its way to the graveyard—preparing to die in the wake of Watergate, overwhelming Democratic majorities in both houses of Congress and the election of Jimmy Carter as President. These analysts have cited several impressive examples of how various Democratic candidates recently won election (or re-election) to the Congress in traditionally Republican districts. However, such examples also can be cited on the side of the Republicans. In Illinois, for instance, the Republican candidate for governor, James R. Thompson, defeated the Democratic candidate and Mayor Daley's choice, Michael Howlett. The Republican Party is neither dead nor about to die. As in previous Presidential elections, the party in defeat seems to be shaken and ready to disappear. In 1972, for example, the Democratic Party was in a state of ruin. Senator George McGovern received his party's nomination from a divided convention only to lose to the Republicans by the largest landslide of votes ever recorded in American history. Many thought the wounds in the Democratic Party were too severe to mend in time for the next Presidential election. Yet in 1976, only four years later, the party emerged as a united organization and nominated a winning candidate. Political parties have periods of highs and lows, depending largely on the tone of the nation and the family of candidates they have to offer. The change that occurred in the Democratic Party from 1972 to 1976 can easily occur in the Republican Party by 1980 or 1984. When the Republicans recover from the after-shock of the Presidential election, they will have ample time to evaluate and revamp the party factions. Perhaps they will discover that the fate of the G.O.P. lies with the family of young Republicans on the horizon. It will be the duty of this new generation of leaders immediately to dispel the cries and predictions that the Republican Party has a short future under the Democratic dynasty. PETER G. VERONERO

'Disguised Extradition'

To the Editor: The threatened deportation from Britain of Philip Agee and Mark Rosenblatt, the U.S. journalists who published criticisms of C.I.A. activities, is clearly an attempt to accomplish a disguised extradition. In Washington, the Justice Department reports that the two men may have violated the Federal espionage statutes, and presumably the U.S. has pressured Britain to return the men. If Agee and Rosenblatt were indicted in the U.S., their extradition under the U.K.-U.S.A. treaty would be improper, either because espionage is not an extraditable offense or because extradition of political offenders is specifically prohibited. It is to be hoped that, on application for habeas corpus in Britain, the court will examine the real motive of the deportation order and that it will refuse to permit the Home Secretary's allegation of threats to U.K. security to serve as a subterfuge for an illegal extradition. about the adequacy of health-care planning and controls over the skyrocketing medical costs.

A third article, critical of the lack of burn facilities in Queens, quotes an administrator, alluding to the second tragedy in a month with multiple burn victims, as saying, "God is trying to tell us something."

I'm not sure He is. A moderate (but not large) number of burn patients were evidently well distributed among facilities in the metropolitan area. Medical specialists, whether burn experts or coronary surgery groups, are all interested in expansion of their own sub-specialties. If the burn teams convince us that Queens needs new burn treatment center beds, which will probably lie empty for 300 days out of each year, then we must be prepared to pay for them and not complain of "skyrocketing" costs. Hazardous Helmets

To the Editor: The new helmet, which is to be distributed to U.S. troops in 1980 and which you showed in your issue of Nov. 17, is held by a strap passing under the jaw to which is fixed another strap running across the chin. Some of your readers may have participated in the Normandy landings of 1944 and remember the dead German artillerymen on Point du Hoc. Though the soldiers were untouched by shell fragments, our naval gunfire created a strong enough blast under their chin-strapped helmets to break their necks. Some readers may wonder, as I do, whether the present Army, by neglecting experience that was gained the hard way, wastes the taxpayers' money on gadgets and risks young lives. ADOLPH G. A Domination 'Myth'

To the Editor: In your Nov. 18 editorial concerning the Board of Regents' education aid you recycle the myth that the State Legislature is dominated by "suburban and small-town delegations." After the 1970 apportionment, of the sixty senators, nine were elected from districts on Long Island; four were elected from Westchester and Rockland Counties. Twenty-five districts are in New York City, and of the remaining 27, seven contain a city of over 100,000 population. Of course, the term, "suburban and small-town delegations" is undefined, but the Big Six "city" senators (New York, Buffalo, Rochester, Yonkers, Syracuse and Albany) clearly constitute a majority of the Senate. In the Assembly, there are 21 districts on Long Island and ten in Westchester and Rockland Counties. Sixty-five are in New York City, and of the remaining 65, thirteen are wholly or in part in cities having a population over 100,000; two in cities over 50,000; two others in cities over 25,000. Since Assembly districts have a smaller population (122,000 vs. 304,000), the impact of cities is greater in the Assembly. Here too, assemblymen from the Big Six cities (a discrete educational system [Education Law, Arts, 52, 52-A]), constitute a clear majority of the Assembly chamber. New York City, with less than 33 percent of the voters, has 42 percent of the seats and thus enjoys a 10 percent "advantage" in the Legislature. The myth of rural domination of the Legislature now is primarily used by ineffectual local officials seeking an excuse to mask their own managerial inadequacies, or lack of courage, or both. They create a scapegoat, upon which all the sins of the community can be placed, to be thrown from the cliff at Azzel. The purpose of this letter is to act as a silver spike driven through the heart of the hourly specter of "rural domination" and thus, both grant it eternal peace and insure that it will no longer emerge at midnight from a dusty newspaper clip file to drain the resolve of the urban electorate. Limits of the Court

To the Editor: Perhaps you do an injustice to Supreme Court when you claim "the sense that the Court is moving justice is waning in the country" (editorial Oct. 25). While we can take satisfaction in the many fruits of the Supreme Court during Earl Warren's tenure as Chief Justice, we may have succumbed to the view that courts are the most appropriate forum in which to public policy, if there is a message in the direction of current Supreme Court decisions, and in the remarks of incumbent Chief Justice, Warren. Then it is that we should look to the political branches of government mirror the wishes of the people. At bottom, the Court is a majoritarian institution. There are limits to its capacity to make public policy, not the least of which is lack of some direct mechanism, as the ballot box, through which the Court could mirror social and political change. In the 1950's and 1960's, the Supreme Court led the "robust pursuit of justice," in part because the Court was unpopular and other public officials were hesitant for the same reason to confront reform. But we are not unmindful of the price we pay for this intervention by the judiciary. We may lose sight of the place of the Court in our affairs unless we recognize, as did Judge Learned Hand, "that a society so given that the moderation is gone, no court can save; that in a society where that flourishes no court need save; a society which evades its responsibilities by thrusting upon the nature of that spirit, that in the end will perish." A Job for Mondale

To the Editor: President-elect Jimmy Carter has a marvelous opportunity, in this transition, to redeem two of his campaign promises in a meaningful and dramatic manner. Mr. Carter has long spoken need to abandon Dr. Kissinger's "Ranger" approach to foreign policy, stressing often the need for a "State" which will work in unison with, and prove respect to, the President as well as to Congressional opinion. He has also assured a skeptical press that he will give his Vice President, Walter Mondale, a significant role in the formulation and execution of policy, the better to equip him for higher office he may be called unexpectedly to assume. It would seem an ideal affair of both sentiments to appoint President Mondale Secretary of Unprecedented though such a may be, it is not barred by the situation and may indeed be an example worth emulating in the future. His unique position in the Administration would enable Vice President Mondale to run President Carter's foreign policy effectively, while a selective office would give him a primary in dealing with foreign policy that would be enhanced by the present possibility that he may assume the Presidency in the event of a tragedy. Command over the mental department would also give greater substance to his participation in the decisional process than his assignments have given past Presidents. It would also prove the most effective way of utilizing what the current incumbent has termed the "high quality" of the Vice President's equipment." SHASHI TRIPATHI

Scofflaw Diplomats

To the Editor: On Nov. 12, The Times published an article on the evils of diplomatic immunity as it affects parking in the city. The article described cars bearing diplomatic license plates and stated that the New York Parking Violations Bureau is "powerless" against those license plates. It is that "powerless" is useless... because the owner's diplomatic immunity exempts him from towing costs. Diplomatic immunity is an impediment in international relations, as has frequently been pointed out. There certainly is something that has done about repeated violations of parking and other traffic laws by diplomats. The issuance of a parking moving violation ticket can be brought to the attention of the Department of State. That department has the recognized authority to advise the embassy of the diplomat's country because of repeated violations of law, that diplomat is no longer acceptable and is declared persona non grata. The diplomat in question should be promptly removed from diplomatic status, and he either returns to his own country or becomes liable for prosecution in our courts. The effectiveness of this procedure depends only on cooperation between the local police and the State Department, supported by an adequate amount of intestinal fortitude in Government. If anyone objects to other countries will retaliate against our diplomats abroad, the answer is that our diplomats should and must do obey the traffic and other local laws of the countries in which they are stationed. If they do not, they expect to pay the penalty. MICHAEL H. G...

O'Dwyer's Concept of His Position Under Charter Assailed at Hearing

By GLENN FOWLER

City Council President Paul O'Dwyer's concept of his role as ombudsman under the new City Charter was sharply challenged yesterday by members of the State Charter Revision Commission.

In more than an hour of testimony at a commission hearing in City Hall, Mr. O'Dwyer insisted that he intended to deal with "any and all" complaints that the citizenry might bring to his attention.

He clashed repeatedly with State Senator Roy M. Goodman, the commission chairman, who accused him of attempting to set up an "elaborate bureaucracy" that was not mandated by the revised Charter adopted by the voters a year ago.

The often acrimonious exchange took place during the third of five scheduled hearings by the Charter commission into progress on implementing the sweeping changes in city government mandated by the electorate.

Mr. O'Dwyer, who also serves as chairman of Mayor Beame's Charter implementation committee, testified for more than an hour on the new responsibilities of the Council President's office. He had previously declined an invitation to testify on broader aspects of the city's response to Charter reform.

Role is Defined
Quoting Charter language, M. Goodman said the commission had envisioned the Council President's function as an "over-see and coordinate" of citywide services that provide information and receive complaints from citizens.

Neighborhood service complaints are to be handled by the new district service managers serving under local community boards, while borough-wide service matters are to be dealt with by borough supervisors.

Referring to an estimate by Mr. O'Dwyer that he would need a budget of $750,000 annually to receive and follow up on several hundred thousand complaints, Mr. Goodman asked caustically: "Why don't you need that kind of money when you already have a network of service managers in the districts, plus the Mayor's Action Office and the Department of Costume Affairs, all handling complaints?"

Mr. O'Dwyer, visibly angered by the question, retorted: "You created this office and now you're trying to reduce it to a small function. You can't set me up as an ombudsman, expect me to make government responsive to the people and then blame me when I fail to do so for lack of adequate staff."

Mr. Goodman and other commission members suggested that the ombudsman mantle of the Charter was not nearly so all-encompassing as Mr. O'Dwyer depicted it. Commissioner Robert J. Milano said at one point:

"Our idea is to reverse the law of bureaucracy, making it heavier at the bottom and lighter at the top, instead of the other way around."

Mr. O'Dwyer refused to specify how he intended to coordinate his own service-complaint function with those of the Mayor's office and other departments, but said he hoped their efforts would dovetail.

He said, in reply to a question, that he expected to confer with district service managers in each community as they were appointed. Under Charter revision, they are supposed to begin work on Jan. 1. The new district lines, under which most city services except fire protection are to be organized, are to take effect on that date but the Board of Estimate has not yet enacted the final map of community districts.

As Mr. Goodman pressed his requests for more detailed replies, Mr. O'Dwyer accused him of "conducting an inquiry" and said the commission should "attend to its own business." He received some support from Assemblyman Leonard P. Stavinsky, who said that as a commission member he considered such matters as the Council President's budget to be outside the commission's purview.

Thomas J. Cuite, Council majority leader, another witness yesterday, said that the new Legislative Office of Budget Review would be organized in time to scrutinize the budget for the fiscal year that began next July 1.

The Council and the Board of Estimate, which will be served jointly by the office, have begun searching for a director. Mr. Cuite rebuffed suggestions that the office supplant the present staff of the Council's Finance Committee, which he said should continue to operate independently to serve the Council only.

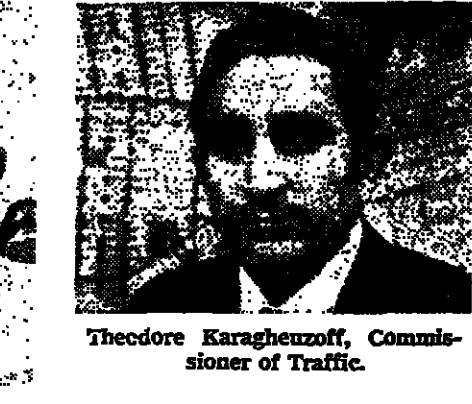

Claire Holbert, secretary to Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti, and Anthony J. Bouza, the former Bronx police chief, won awards.

Complaints About Unheated Homes May Go Unheeded, Arrested in Yonkers

New York City housing officials warned yesterday that in any sustained cold spell this winter the city would be even less able than in past years to respond effectively to tenant complaints of lack of heat or other housing emergencies.

The officials described the anti-effects of the budget and personnel cuts during interviews on the first cold day of the season.

Mr. O'Dwyer, visibly angered by the question, retorted: "You created this office and now you're trying to reduce it to a small function. You can't set me up as an ombudsman, expect me to make government responsive to the people and then blame me when I fail to do so for lack of adequate staff."

Further cutbacks in the amount of staff are also in progress, the number is staffed are also in progress, the number is staffed are also in progress.

8 New York City Employees Are Given Tax-Free $5,000 Awards for Public Service

Eight New York City employees, chosen as "representative of the best" in the municipal ranks, were honored yesterday by the Fund for the City of New York in its fourth annual program of awards for public service.

The other winners have spent long periods in municipal service and hold either high-level or middle-level jobs. They are Anthony J. Bouza, the controversial Bronx police commander who retired last month and took a top transit police command; Harry S. Tishelman, deputy finance administrator; Theodore Karagheuzoff, Commissioner of Traffic; Dominic L. Europa, supervising microbiologist at Bellevue Hospital; Edna Ochs, supervisor of keypunch operations in the Budget Bureau, and Claire Holbert, secretary to Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti.

Mr. O'Dwyer, visibly angered by the question, retorted: "You created this office and now you're trying to reduce it to a small function. You can't set me up as an ombudsman, expect me to make government responsive to the people and then blame me when I fail to do so for lack of adequate staff."

Miss Holbert, born on Manhattan's East Side, went to work for the City Planning Commission as a stenographer in 1950, rising to administrative manager before transferring early this year with Mr. Zuccotti to the Deputy Mayor's office.

Mr. Karagheuzoff, the youngest career civil servant to become a Commissioner—he was 33 when appointed traffic head in 1968—is a native of the Bay Ridge section of Brooklyn. He is credited with a number of innovations including reversible bus lanes and the use of meter maids for traffic enforcement.

Police Leaflets Urging Prostitutes: Leave Pimps and 'Get Out of Game'

By JUDITH CUMMINGS

In an effort to fight prostitution in midtown Manhattan, the Police Department is distributing circulars urging prostitutes to break away from their pimps.

"Attention prostitutes of New York," the typewritten fliers read. "Are you tired of giving all your money to your pimp? ..."

The campaign is being handled by a seven-man Pimp Squad set up last April to combat prostitution in the Times Square area.

A 16-year-old girl from the Bronx, who gave her name as Nancy Hoens, told the committee that she began as a prostitute "once or twice a week when I absolutely needed the money."

The leaflet campaign was described yesterday at public hearings on juvenile prostitution and runaways held by the Assembly's Standing Committee on Child Welfare.

Police spokesman said that there were 13,000 reported runaways between the ages of 12 and 17 in the city last year.

The officials described the effects of the budget and personnel cuts during interviews on the first cold day of the season.

NATIONAL PARKS DRAWING 30 MILLION MORE IN 1976

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30 (UPI)—Americans have been going to national parks in even larger numbers than expected for the Bicentennial year, with a big increase in off-season visitors adding to the Fourth of July crowds, park officials said today.

On the basis of use through September, the National Park Service estimates that 268 million people will visit the parks in 1976—about 30 million more than last year. Last winter, the officials predicted that the Bicentennial year would draw about 263 million people to the nearly 300 national park areas.

Visitors to Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia increased more than expected in July. But the mysterious "legionnaires" disease, which killed 29 persons after a late July American Legion convention in Philadelphia, apparently affected attendance at Independence, which the Park Service had planned as its biggest Bicentennial attraction. While 1.6 million people visited that park in July, only 430,200 went in August. In September, the number increased to 1.04 million.

He was deer hunting in the northern part of Lycoming County yesterday when he shot the bear.

Public Affairs Groups, Now on the Outside, Expects Access to Power Under Carter

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—The Presidency of Jimmy Carter is expected to present new opportunities as well as potential problems for the public affairs lobby, law firms and research groups that are dedicated to countering the influence of the Government of the established special interests.

During the last eight years, when the administration of Republican officials was favorable to the traditional interests with economic power, Ralph Nader, Common Cause, Friends of the Earth and the rest of the public affairs movement took root here and flourished like weeds in an empty lot.

A Question on Many Minds
The question now in the minds of many in Washington is and out of the public affairs movement is, what happens to this new force when a Democratic Administration that has portrayed itself as less hostile than the Republican takes office?

Will the movement thrive, as the civil rights movement did during the friendly days of the Johnson Administration, or will it languish, as student activism did when the military draft ended?

Will the advocates of citizens' causes remain on the outside, prodding and poking at the Government, or will they accept jobs in the Carter administration and try to press their causes from within? Will the money from private contributions be used to support the movement?

This is the last in a series on the Federal Government in transition.

tions and foundations continue to be available, or will contributors shift their support to other charities? Those who are part of the movement—environmentalists, consumer activists, poverty lawyers and the like—say that they cannot answer those questions until they see the appointments made by President-elect Jimmy Carter and measure the attitudes of his administration.

Mr. Nader, for instance, was beyond doubt one of the most influential people in Washington outside the Government during the last eight years, but he talked only once with President Nixon and once with President Ford.

The only time he spoke with Mr. Nixon was at the reception after the wedding of Mr. Nixon's daughter Tricia. As he walked through the receiving line, Mr. Nader recalls, he shook Mr. Nixon's hand, and the President, remembering that his daughter's husband, Edward Cox, had worked for Mr. Nader one summer, remarked with a slip of the tongue, "Well, old Eddie was a Raider's Nader, huh?"

The only time he talked with President Ford, Mr. Nader says, was when he and 10 or 12 others were called to the White House to discuss the implementation of Mr. Ford's soon-to-be-abandoned Whip Inflation Now program.

By contrast, Mr. Nader first met Jimmy Carter when the President-elect was Governor of Georgia. He spent a day conferring with Mr. Carter in Plains, Ga., last summer after the Democratic National Convention, and he has talked with him by telephone several times since. "I want access," Mr. Nader said in an interview. "I want to be able to see him and talk to him. I expect to be contacted, and I was told that I would be, particularly on regulatory and consumer matters."

It is "bound to make a difference," Mr. Nader said, "if public interest groups can meet with Carter and his people when they couldn't meet anyone at the White House for eight years."

There is no doubt that the public affairs movement has become a potent political force in such areas as the environment, health care, consumer protection, energy development, tax revision and Congressional reform.

Its emergence, said Representative Alder J. Milva, an Illinois Democrat who was first elected in 1968, is "the biggest change I've seen since I first came here."

Mr. Milva told an interviewer, "Instead of anti-establishment groups handing out leaflets on a street corner, we have people working very effectively in the halls of Congress." Sending themselves without access to the executive branch of the Government, the public affairs organizations concentrated on lobbying in Congress and the regulatory agencies and on suing corporations and other powerful institutions.

250,000 dues-paying members and a budget of about $5 million a year, it is the largest of the organizations. Now six years old, it has concentrated on improving and opening the workings of government. Its lobbying was largely responsible for the legislation that allowed public financing of Presidential campaigns and for a number of changes in the way the Senate and House work.

Nader groups. There are more than a dozen organizations in Washington affiliated with Mr. Nader and others that were once affiliated and are now independent. Among the most familiar are the Health Research Group, whose petitions with the Food and Drug Administration led to an end to the use of various food additives and packaging materials that were found to be dangerous; the Public Citizen Litigation Group, whose suits led to court decisions that price schedules for lawyers and prohibitions against drug-price advertising by pharmacies were forms of price-fixing; the Tax Reform Research Group, which disclosed that many special interests would have benefited from this year's tax legislation, an effort that resulted in a rewriting of the bill, and Congress Watch, which has lobbied successfully on dozens of bills in the last few years.

Energy and environmental organizations in Washington, and elsewhere, have managed to block the building of freeways, curb pollution by industries and influence the nation's energy policies by publicizing health and safety questions.

Law firms. A number of law firms across the country were founded exclusively as advocates in public affairs cases, and many of the nation's largest private one were offered them but that they value their freedom too much to take a lower-level job.

"I could be head of the antitrust division [of the Justice Department] or Solicitor General, that's our thing. But that's not going to happen," said Alan R. Morrison, Mr. Nader's chief courtesan lawyer.

"No matter how good the Carter government is, there will be hundreds of thousands of wrong judgments by government, and we will be needed on the outside to challenge them," Mr. Morrison said.

There is general agreement among those in the movement that, as Mr. Morrison said, there will be plenty of work to be done and that the task of the public affairs advocates will be easier under the next administration.

James Fling, head of the Energy Action Committee, an organization that attempts to counter the political influence of the big oil companies, compared the role of the public affairs movement in the coming administration to that of the church organizations in the Johnson Administration.

"When was the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights the most effective?" Mr. Fling asked, referring to a major civil rights firm, have begun to permit their lawyers to represent citizens in such cases. Among the successful suits have been those that guaranteed the rights of the mentally ill and retarded and that forced states to raise and spend money more equitably for public schools.

The New York Times
Public affairs lobbyists, from left, Ralph Nader, Carol Tucker Foreman of the Consumer Federation of America, and David Cohen of Common Cause, discussed their possible roles in and outside the coming Administration.

Some men and women have left the public affairs organizations to join the Carter camp; others are expected to take jobs in the new administration in the months ahead.

Barbara Blum, who was an environmental lobbyist before going to work in the Georgia Statehouse in Mr. Carter's term as Governor, is now director of transition operations.

Harrison Wolford, an early associate of Mr. Nader, is a ranking transition planner in charge of Government reorganization.

Joseph Osek, a lawyer with the Center for Law and Social Policy, is leading the health area of the transition team, and Joseph L. Levin Jr., from the Southern Poverty Law Center is in charge of transition at the Justice Department.

Among those announced as advisers to the President-elect on appointments to major positions in the new administration are Carol Foreman, executive director of the Consumer Federation of America, and Martin Wright Edelman, executive director of the Children's Defense Fund.

One environmentalist, Joseph Browder, resigned from the Carter staff last week with the charge that his work was being undermined by political considerations, but there is no indication that the other public affairs advocates now on the inside are similarly disgruntled.

Some of the most prominent members of the public affairs movement said that they would never join the Carter administration. Among them were Mr. Nader and David Cohen, president of Common Cause. Both said that they thought they could be more effective outside the Government.

Others, like Anthony Reisman, a lawyer who specializes in challenging Government policies on nuclear energy, and Henry Geller, who has brought a number of citizens' suits in the field of communications, said that they were definitely interested in Government jobs.

"I would like to try making policy," Mr. Reisman said. "I could learn something from some time in Government, and it might make me a better shaker later on."

The prevalent view among those most active in the public affairs movement is that there is a permanent reality in the fact that they would take a top position if lobbying organization. Then, he answered his own question: "During the Johnson Administration those people had a lot to say about the reach and substance of civil rights bill. Then they helped to lobby them through and the Administration could bounce strategy and risks and decisions off them. No one would have said then that the should have gone out of business."

One of the questions now faced by those in the movement is whether they will be able to continue to raise money from liberals once the Republicans are no longer in power.

Common Cause, which depends on dues-paying members for its finances, has its most successful fund-raising year in 1974, the year of the impeachment inquiry and the Nixon resignation. Other organizations had similar experiences.

"It's nice to have a big boom, and the Nixon-Ford Presidencies were that," said Miss Claybrook, whose operation, like the other Nader affiliates, depends largely on contributions from individuals.

The organizations that receive foundation support are also fearful that their money supply will evaporate if the foundations see no need for a liberal counter-government.

"Many contributors may be philosophically allied with Carter and be unlikely to fund his critics," said Robert B. Choate, who specializes in nutrition issues.

Mr. Nader, on the other hand, believes that money will be even more plentiful if the movement has more successes. "What gives momentum to citizens' groups is when they win," Mr. Nader said. "After you lose a few, people get discouraged, but the more cases you win the more money you bring in."

In any event, the groups seem likely to become more ambitious in their demands on the Government. Many advocates noted that the public affairs movement in California had some dramatic successes after several of its members entered the administration of Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr.

"It's heartening to find public interest lawyers who are also fearful that their transition," said Charles Halpern, director of the Council for Public Interest Law, who is one of the most respected advocates in the country.

"But it's also heartening," he said, "to know that the public interest movement has become a permanent reality in the United States."

Dole Urges Republican Governors To Build Party, Not a Candidate

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—Senator Robert Dole of Kansas said today that Republican leaders in choosing a new party chairman, should not concern themselves with building a candidate but with building the party.

This comment by the 1976 Republican Vice-Presidential nominee, made at a meeting of the Republican Governors Association, reflected the most serious obstacle facing John B. Connally in his bid to become national chairman in January.

Many prominent Republicans, including a number favorable to Mr. Connally, are convinced that he is interested in succeeding Mary Louise Smith as chairman in order to attract national publicity as a foundation for a campaign for the party's Presidential nomination in 1980.

Still recovering from the 1976 election results, most party leaders are reluctant now to make any kind of decision that could be controlling four years later, even conservatives who regard the former Texas Governor as a leading contender for the national ticket in the future.

A key Ford campaign adviser, who has discussed the chairmanship with an ideological range of party leaders, said he believed there was general agreement on this job description:

"The new chairman should not be a potential candidate or a front man for one. He should be sufficiently neutral in philosophy to hold the party together rather than divide it still further. And he should have some professional experience in political management."

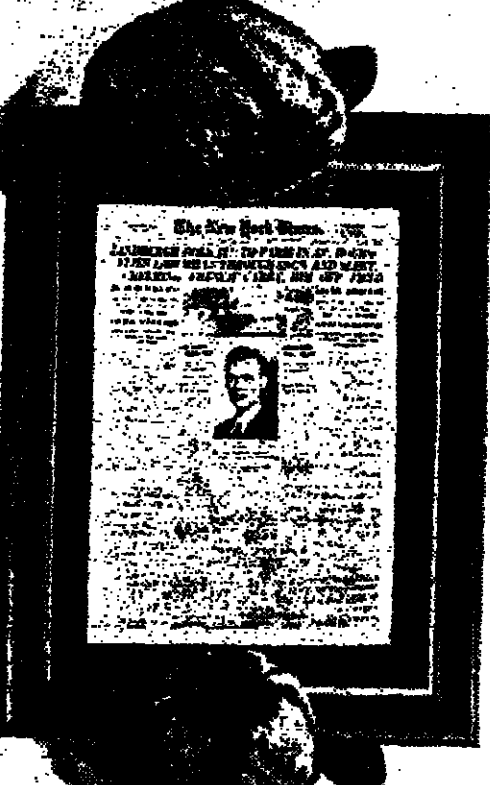

The White House declined to say today whether the President regarded Mr. Connally as an acceptable Republican chairman or would support Mr. Connally for the job.

Leader of Carter's Budget Team Called Brilliant in Varying Ways

By EILEEN SHANAHAN Special to The New York Times WASHINGTON, Nov. 26—Ask different people who have known him to describe W. Bowman Cutler and the word "brilliant" appears in every answer. "Brilliant and charming," "brilliant and likable," "brilliant and very, very smooth," "brilliant and cocky," "brilliant and a little too much of the young-man-in-a-hurry" are typical replies.

Bowman Cutler

Whether or not he has been in too much of a hurry, Mr. Cutler has, indeed, packed a lot into 34 years—an education that includes two master's degrees, jobs with two large corporations, leadership of a foundation-supported public interest project, co-authorship of a book and, through it all, intense, active participation in politics. His varied interests in economic analysis, management and politics have now converged, bringing him into a key position on President-elect Jimmy Carter's "transition team," as head of the group working on the Federal Government's budget.

In truth, Mr. Cutler has had the job, without the title, for quite a while because the people around Mr. Carter recognized quite early that if a new President is to put his own imprint on the government, the first place he has to start making substantive decisions is in the budget.

Thus, Mr. Cutler was dispatched to Washington immediately after Mr. Carter got the Democratic Presidential nomination, to start talking to the people who knew about the Federal budget and would discuss it with a representative of the candidate. That meant, chiefly, the two Congressional budget committees, and Mr. Cutler is credited, by budget committee members and staff aides who deal with him, with asking the right questions from the start.

The Carter Transition Team

Fusion of Aides From Georgia With Specialists From Capital Shows No New Faces Thus Far

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—Despite various public pledges to bring fresh faces into the Government, President-elect Jimmy Carter's transition task force represents a fusion of his trusted political entourage from Georgia with a surprising number of specialists with Washington Government backgrounds. Their analysis youth has given them a somewhat exaggerated reputation for liberal activism.

as special assistant to Ben W. Heineman, president of Northwest Industries, Inc., where he worked on budgeting, planning and acquisitions. In 1972 he became the head of the Cable TV Information Center in Washington, an organization financed by the Ford Foundation, aimed at helping city and state governments develop cable television. In 1975, he took a job as assistant to the president of the Washington Post Company, where he did analyses of businesses the company was considering acquiring.

He returned to Waterford for that job and still lives there with his children, an 8-year-old girl and a 5-year-old boy, whose custody he shares equally with his wife, from whom he is separated.

When he resumed his residence in Waterford, he ran unsuccessfully for a seat in the Legislature in 1972, then contributed to some Democratic victories in Loudoun County, for both state and local offices, in 1974 and 1975. In 1976, while most of the Democratic hierarchy in the state remained uncommitted to any of the Presidential candidates, Mr. Cutler's Loudoun County group went for Mr. Carter and won in the party caucuses.

But in general they have a decidedly more pragmatic, less visionary idealism than the young Democrats who flocked to Washington in 1960 for President Kennedy's inaugural.

In the corridors of the transition headquarters at the old Health, Education, and Welfare Building on Independence Avenue, one senses the clean-cut activism of people who believe in good government. As one Carter aide put it, "We are not antestablishment activists but people who believe in the system and have a commitment to the political process. These are the children of suburbia."

They may be too young to be considered men of power, but the 33-year-old director of the Southern Poverty Law Center, or Joseph O'Neil, the 34-year-old director of a Ralph Nader affiliate, the Center for Law and Social Policy, or S. David Freeman, a veteran critic of the energy industry.

Some transition teams include political aides from the Democratic National Committee, former lobbyists from organizations like the United States Conference of Mayors, professional Washington-based critics of government from the Brookings Institution or public interest law firms.

Their analysis youth has given them a somewhat exaggerated reputation for liberal activism.

But many others seem more like middle-of-the-road liberals who feel very much in tune with Mr. Carter's promise of competent government rather than of an activist government.

Stuart Eizenstat, the tall, slender Atlanta attorney who has been Mr. Carter's issues chief in three different campaigns, chose the label "pragmatic progressive" for himself, and it would suit the mood of many of the young people now fashioning Mr. Carter's government takeover.

"There is a sort of strange—I shouldn't say strange—a unique sense of idealism," he observed in a soft Southern accent. "That we've had a government that has turned its back on people, a sense of the restoration of idealism, but at the same time combined with a healthy skepticism that many problems are intractable, that we're not going to solve these problems overnight."

Another key figure in the Carter transition, Harrison Wolford, a former Congressional aide and public interest lawyer, captured the contrast between the more moderate idealism of today with that of the Kennedy era. "There is the same kind of feeling as in the Kennedy period," he said, "except there is much less arrogance, much less assumption that we have the answer. We're going in with our eyes wide open."

Dorsett Heisman Winner

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

Tony Dorsett, the University of Pittsburgh tailback who set more collegiate rushing records than any other player in the 108-year history of football, was named winner of the 1976 Heisman Trophy yesterday as the outstanding college player in the nation.

The 22-year-old native of Alliquipp, Pa., who led the Panthers through an undefeated and untied regular season and to the No. 1 national ranking, easily defeated his primary rival for the award—Ricky Bell of Southern California. Dorsett had 2,357 points to 1,346 for Bell, who is also a tailback. Bell, however, was hampered by midseason injuries and missed all or part of four games.

Rob Lytle, the speedy running back for Michigan, finished a distant third with 413 points, followed by Terry Miller, the Oklahoma State running back. Then came three quarterbacks—Tom Kramer of Rice, Gifford Nielsen of Brigham Young and Ray Goff of Georgia. Mike Voight, North Carolina's tailback, was eighth, with two West Coast quarterbacks ninth and 10th—Joe Roth of California and Jeff Dankworth of the University of California, Los Angeles.

863 Ballots Mailed In

Dorsett, the only player to rush for more than 6,000 yards in a varsity career, received 701 votes for first place, 112 for second and 30 for third. The Downtown Athletic Club, which conducts the Heisman Trophy election each year, sent 1,014 ballots to sportswriters and broadcasters across the nation but received only 863 completed ballots. This means that Dorsett was first on 81.2 percent of the ballots but, surprisingly, he was not even mentioned on 20 ballots.

Each ballot calls for a first, second and third choice and scoring is based on 3 points for first, 2 for second and 1 for third. Bell received 73 first-place votes, 485 second and 157 thirds. Lytle had 35 first-place votes and Miller 18.

Dorsett and Bell ran one, two in all five voting districts—East, South, Midwest, Southwest and Far West. Lytle was third in four areas, with Miller, the only junior in the top four, taking third spot in the Southwest.

Dorsett's margin of 1,011 points over Bell was one of the largest in the 42-year history of the Heisman

Tony Dorsett with the Heisman Trophy he won yesterday.

Trophy. O. J. Simpson of Southern California, who won the trophy in 1968, had the biggest Heisman victory spread of 1,750 points over Leroy Keyes of Purdue.

Career Total of 6,882 Yards

Dorsett burst on the college scene with 101 yards rushing against Georgia in Pitt's opening game of 1973, his freshman year. The game ended in a 7-7 tie. He never missed a regular-season game, playing in 44. With the help of 33 games in which he rushed for more than 100 yards, Dorsett reached a total of 6,882 yards last Friday night when Pitt beat Penn State, 24-7, in his final regular-season game.

Dorsett finished in grand style against Penn State with two touchdowns and 224 yards rushing. This enabled him to break a 30-year-old scoring record set by Glenn Davis of Army. Dorsett scored 356 points in four seasons, 2 more points than Davis, the 1946 Heisman Trophy winner, made in his four campaigns as a Cadet. Dorsett tied 18 National Collegiate records as he did more to revive his team's fortunes than any other Heisman Trophy winner had done. Most of the 40 previous winners entered colleges with successful teams.

Dorsett finished fourth in the 1975 voting behind Archie Griffin of Ohio State, who became the only man to win the trophy twice; Chuck Muncie who set a season rushing record of 1,948 yards this fall, surpassed Griffin's career rushing record of 5,177 yards before that mark was a year old.

Dorsett was recruited by Coach Johnny Majors, who was hired in 1973 to upgrade a bad football scene at Pitt. Dorsett and Majors brought Pitt its first winning season in 10 years. They took Pitt into the Fiesta Bowl in 1973 and the Sun Bowl in 1975 and will be in the Sugar Bowl.

Islanders Defeated By Leafs

By PARTON KEESÉ

Special to The New York Times
UNIONDALE, L. I., Nov. 30.—Trouble in River City—and Nassau Coliseum tonight. The Islanders' fourth home game in a row, the fourth in their last five games, as the Toronto Maple Leafs beat them, 4-2.

Besides that loss, the Islanders' Denis Potvin was injured in the second period and had to go to the hospital for X-rays. The all-star defenseman and team's leading scorer suffered a twisted neck when Lenny McDonald of the Leafs ran into him accidentally in the second period. The extent of the injury has not been determined.

With their top player off the ice, the Islanders were unable to stop a three-goal rally by Toronto in the last 11 minutes. Dave Williams, on a breakaway, beat Glenn Resch, the New York goaltender, easily to tie the score, 2-2. Then a pair of goals by Bob Neely and Scott Garland put the Leafs ahead.

"We're having our problems," admitted Coach Al Arbour of the Islanders, "but we'll have to work them out by ourselves. We're not down on ourselves; there are games like this in a season, but we have to bounce back, that's all there is to it."

Arbour also credited Mike Palmateer, Toronto's rookie goalie, with a "fine game," but added that wasn't the only thing that beat us.

Islanders Are Victims

Hardly resembling a first-place team during the first period, the Islanders were falling victim to the Leafs' short chases and long shooting. They even came out on the worst end of a roughing duel Bob Nystrom of New York and Pat Boutette received 4 minutes and 2 minutes, respectively.

Before the Toronto power play could take effect, however, Ian Turnbull beat Resch with a 50-footer to Chico's stick side. The puck came out to the Leafs' defenseman as a rebound of Stan Weir's shot, to which Chico gave a mighty kick, little realizing it would come right back to haunt him.

The period ended with the Leafs leading, 1-0, and Palmateer living up to all the raves that had preceded him into the Coliseum. The goaltender entered with a won-lost-tied mark of 3-3-1, which had accounted for all but one of the Leafs' victories.

"We're the ones that keep the puck out of the net," said Coach Red Kelly proudly. "If you don't count, a nine-goal game with Montreal or a six-goaler against St. Louis, Mike has allowed just 18 goals in 11 starts."

Jude Drouin broke the spell Palmateer had cast with a goal at 5 minutes 25 seconds of the second period. Gerry Hart took the shot about 57 feet away, and Drouin, standing by the crease, tipped the flying puck past the young goalie.

Denis Potvin Injured

It was two minutes after this tying goal that Denis Potvin was injured. Taken down by Inge Hammarstrom in the corner of the Toronto zone, Denis was getting up when McDonald skated by and rammed him again.

This time, Potvin remained in a clump along the boards as play continued. Clark Gillies decided to retaliate, and he and McDonald had a short slugfest in the Leaf end until the officials broke it up.

After Denis was helped off the ice, the Islanders became more aggressive, which wasn't too hard to do, considering.

Nets Top Knicks, Get Love of Bulls

By SAM GOLDAPER

The disorganized Knicks absorbed their fourth straight loss last night and their fifth in the last six games which the guard-oriented Nets obtained the front-court offensive help they had been seeking.

During the Nets' 104-103 victory over the Knicks before a Madison Square Garden crowd of 14,807, the Nets announced the purchase of 34-year-old Bob Love from the Chicago Bulls for money and a second-round draft choice. A Net, spokesman said the amount paid for the 6-foot-8-inch Love was between "$50,000 and $100,000." The Bulls have been trying to peddle Love, who is in his 11th National Basketball Association season and his eighth with the Bulls.

Tiny Archibald, a Knick nemesis when he played for the Cincinnati Royals, who later became the Kansas City Kings, continued to harass the Knicks. He scored 34 points, including the basket that put the Nets ahead, 102-101, with 1 minute remaining.

Fox Fowled by Burden

Archibald scored on a driving layup after Rich Jones and Jan van Breda Kolff converged on Earl Monroe, forcing him to fumble the ball. Jones picked up the loose ball and passed off to Archibald.

The Knicks had two more tries at winning the game but both times Ticky Burden forced bad shots. He also fouled Jim Fox in the backcourt with 7 seconds left. Fox was sent into the game with 4 seconds remaining as a replacement at center for Kim Hughes.

Kevin Loughery, the Net coach, wanted a better foul shooter in the game. Fox made both free throws and that proved to be the margin of victory, since Spencer Haywood scored for the Knicks with 2 seconds left.

"The last two shots were plays that were supposed to be set up for Clyde [Walt Frazier]," said Burden, "but they got busted up."

Loughery credited Chuck Terry, who was guarding Frazier, for helping break up the plays.

In an effort to pull the Knicks out of the doldrums, Coach Red Holzman in effect, shifted to a three-guard offense and started Frazier as the small forward and used Burden and Monroe in the backcourt. Both small forwards, Jim McMillian and Bill Bradley, are hurt and Mo Layton joined them last night on the injury list.

Small Forward in '79 Series

It was the first time the 6-4 Frazier had started in the front court, though he had played the small forward position in the 1970 N.B.A. championship series against the Los Angeles Lakers after Willis Reed was injured.

In the final 4:22 of the game, the Knicks' third-guard offense seemed like a winner as Frazier, Burden and Monroe scored 8 points to keep the Knicks ahead, but the Nets came charging back after each basket.

"I don't think it was too well-played a game," said Loughery, "but we hung in there. Our pressure defense got us

By MURRAY CHASS

Jim Wynn

For the third time in the last two weeks, the Yankees reaffirmed their belief in the free-enterprise system yesterday, this time by purchasing Jim Wynn from the Atlanta Braves for about $110,000.

Wynn, an aging but power-hitting outfielder who earned about $125,000 last season, was not a free agent, but he was available because of a free agent. When the Braves signed Gary Matthews for five years to play left field for $1.75 million, Wynn became expendable.

Despite his age—he will be 35 next March—Wynn was attractive to the Yankees because he is a right-handed power hitter. They signed a left-handed power hitter by the name of Reggie Jackson 24 hours earlier. And 11 days before that, they signed Don Gullett, a left-handed power pitcher.

During Jackson's coronation as a Yankee king, Monday, he was asked how he felt about the charge that the Yankees were buying a pennant.

"There are other teams that had an opportunity to pick up players," he replied. "No one said the Green Bay Packers bought a championship when they signed Jim Grabowski and Danny Anderson. No one said the Jets bought an entire league when they signed Joe Namath."

And then Gabe Paul interrupted.

No Stopping Yankees
"The other 25 clubs are welcome to do the same thing," the Yankee president said. "This is free enterprise. I might add the Yankees aren't stopping here."

Stop they didn't. The ink was hardly dry on Jackson's five-year, 2.9 million contract when Paul completed the deal for Wynn Monday night. Wynn, who

What It's All About: Money

It didn't take the New York Yankees long to pierce the strangest myth on the long-green sports scene—that, given their choice, ballplayers would not necessarily rush toward the money.

You don't have to be John Maynard Keynes or John Kenneth Galbraith or even Reginald Martinez Jackson to spot the fallacy in that one. After all, professional athletes play for pay, they won their "freedom" fair and square in court and they are using that freedom to gravitate toward money because that's what the sports revolution of the 1970's is all about: How to get more of somebody else's money.

They are not alone. On the other side of the coin, the teams are trying to pry more loot from television, pitting network against network for the right to carry their games and show-case their commercials. They are trying to keep the athletes from using their new freedom to grab too much of the loot. And, falling that, they are reaching for more of the public's money by raising ticket prices to keep the supply flowing.

Money. It's what "the dismal science" of economics is all about. People work for it, struggle for it, cry for it, vote for it. There's nothing necessarily wrong with it, if your other values somehow survive. It's the thing that made the Dodgers leave Brooklyn and travel 3,000 miles to Los Angeles, that made the Braves leave Boston for Milwaukee and later Milwaukee for Atlanta, that made the American League install the designated hitter, that created the World Football League and killed the World Football League, that made Julius Erving unhappy and Roy Boe unhappy.

And Now, Jimmy Wynn

It's also the thing that the Yankees spent more of yesterday to buy Jimmy Wynn from the Braves as they continued the most dazzling display of money in sports history. And no fan or economist in his right mind thinks they will stop there. They have the supply of it and the demand for more of it, whether the equation includes a shortstop arriving or an outfielder leaving. As Reggie Jackson said for everybody, after some pious words about George Steinbrenner's charm: "It's become a business with us."

Two years ago, even before the upheaval in baseball, the four "major league" sports—football, baseball, hockey and basketball—embraced 120 teams in 20 divisions in seven leagues. The World Football Association joined the melee with one name player, Dobby Hull, who was spirited from the Chicago Black Hawks for $2.5 million. The World Football League started with three: Larry Csonka, Jim Kilick and Paul Warfield, and the price tag was $3 million. Then the Yankees won the auction for Catfish Hunter for $3.5 million. And even Mike Burke, who had gone from running the Yankees to running Madison Square Garden, was impressed. "The disorderliness of the whole sports scene," he observed, "is distracting and fragmenting the public's attention. There is a point of no return, and we're getting there. There's going to be a shakedown."

But while there has been a shakedown in some areas, even in some leagues, there has been a roaring shakeup in others. Now, it's baseball's turn at bat financially. The players sued for their freedom from the old "reserve clause" in contracts; the club owners, locked the "spring training" camps; the two sides grappled and negotiated and, when the season ended two months ago, 25 unsigned players scrambled into the first free-agent auction market in the game's history.

Since then, the public has been watching while the teams have been grumbling—and spending. Money: It's the real measure of the series of stunning victories achieved by Marvin Miller and the players over Bowie Kuhn and the owners. And note that Marvin, the strategic genius for the Players Association, is an economist, a practitioner of the dismal science of money.

Cash-and-Carry Business

The wonder of it all, aside from the sums being thrown around, is why anybody still clings to the myth that money isn't the prime mover. Forget that Sal Bando took the Milwaukee Brewers' offer or that Wayne Garland went with the Cleveland Indians or that 35-year-old Bert Campaneris headed for the Texas Rangers. Not everybody was offered the right job on the right team. But when the California Angels ponied up $6 million, they came away with Joe Rudi, Don Baylor and Bobby Grich. When the Yankees put $5 million on the table, they won Don Gullett and Reggie Jackson. And when Charley Finley failed to put his money where his mouth is, he lost one-third of his Oakland A's.

The rich get richer in this business, and no amount of rhetoric can soften it. In any revolution, old relationships are destroyed and new power structures created. That's the purpose of a revolution, and that's the stark fact of life now confronting the Oakland A's and Cincinnati Reds, who reigned in baseball before the revolution.

Money: the thing that rebuilt the Yankees and their stadium, the thing that makes dreams and breaks dreams, the thing that got pitchers like Catfish Hunter and Don Gullett for the Yankees and that kept Tom Seaver, Jerry Koosman and Jon Matlack for the Mets. Money, Yours and mine and Steinbrenner's and Jackson's. It can be great or it can be awful. But that's what it's all about.

By ROBIN HERMAN

Special to The New York Times
ATLANTA, Nov. 30.—John Davidson, the Ranger goalie, held off the Atlanta Flames in the third period tonight to preserve a 2-2 tie with the team New York must pass in the Patrick Division to win a playoff berth.

Davidson faced 44 shots and held a steady course as his team reeled before the muscular, organized play of the Flames. A power-play goal by Phil Esposito midway in the game evened the score at 2-2.

Four points continued to separate the teams in the division standing. This was their first of six regular-season confrontations.

By gaining the tie before 9,262 fans, the Rangers extended their unbeaten streak to five games. They owed the streak largely to Davidson.

"This is my fourth year in this league," said the 23-year-old goalie. "It's about time I started playing well. I don't understand why it's happening. You can never predict these things, but I think the older you get the more consistent you can be."

Forwards Help on Defense
The Ranger forwards fell back into their zone with regularity to help on defense, but the team was forced into rushing passes and mishandling of the puck by the muscular forechecking of the Flames. Atlanta's best checking line is also its highest-scoring combination, and three different Ranger lines found themselves outplayed by the trio of Eric Vail, Tom Lysiak and the rookie right wing, Willie Plett.

Early, the Rangers found room to engineer a snappy passing play for a goal by Walt Tkaczuk, with assists from Dave Maloney and Greg Polis. But then the Rangers allowed David Shand, an Atlanta defenseman, to cut through three zones—all the way to the red goal line behind John Davidson, who was guarding the Ranger net for the seventh consecutive game.

Shand spun and passed to Plett, who scored from the faceoff circle. Davidson seemed to have been screened.

In the second period Vail scored for

Anthony Drew Dorsett

By NEIL AMDUR

Last spring Tony Dorsett phoned his mother and told her he wanted to skip his senior year at the University of Pittsburgh and sign a lucrative contract to play pro football in Canada. "You know you're not leaving school with one more year left."

Ma concerned Myrtle Dorsett told her son that day. "Why not?" Tony wobbled. "If they pay me the money they say they will, I'll leave."

"You need to graduate," Mrs. Dorsett stressed, realizing the seriousness of her son's intentions. "And if you go to Canada, I won't be able to see you play. And you won't get a chance to win the Heisman Trophy either."

When Myrtle Dorsett told her 8-year-old son that he moved too slowly to be a good football player, Tony replied angrily. "I'm gonna show you, mother, I'm gonna show you."

Dorsett was 5 feet 11 inches, 155 pounds when he reported for the first day of fall camp as a college freshman and couldn't find his dormitory room.

"That's supposed to be our salvation!" Dean Billick, the sports information director, exclaimed at the time.

For many years, Dorsett's bright, brown eyes were his most striking feature, earning him the nickname "Hawk-eye" from friends. After four years of gaining 12 National Collegiate records, the eyes still sparkle; the nickname has been shortened to the Hawk, and they are overshadowed by descriptive superlatives once associated with such classic running backs as O.J. Simpson and Gale Sayers.

Gil Brandt, the director of pro personnel for the Dallas Cowboys, says Dorsett has unmatched quickness from the time he gets the ball to the time he reaches the line of scrimmage.

"He also has great vision as a runner," adds Brandt, considered an astute judge of talent. "He's like a baseball hitter who never swings at a bad ball."

Tony Dorsett always knew what he wanted. What he didn't want was to follow his father, Wesley, into the steel mills and come out with his face so covered with soot that his son would not recognize him.

Dorsett was born April 7, 1954, in Alliquippa, Pa., the youngest of four brothers. He also had two sisters.

Advice From Mother
Dorsett's career at Pitt almost ended before it began. Several weeks into his freshman year, he phoned home and told his mother college wasn't what he thought it would be, football was a business and not fun, and he was quitting.

"I told him not to quit," Myrtle Dorsett recalled yesterday. "I said you only get this chance once in a lifetime. I told him to pick up the phone and call if he ever needed anything, but I said, 'don't leave.' A couple of days later, he told me everything was all right."

Dorsett gained confidence and 40 pounds during his four-year career without losing a step. He still speaks softly and is slow warming to people until he feels he knows them. But as Majors said yesterday, "He'll never back away from a fight and he never backs off a hard tackle."

Several years ago, a woman reporter asked Dorsett if the little boy who frequently frolicked with him in the Pitt locker room was his son. Dorsett acknowledged that his son, Anthony Jr., was born out of wedlock (on the day of his first collegiate game) and then wondered why it took over two years for someone to ask the question.

Dorsett also did not back down when he felt West Virginia players were piling on during the late stages of a game earlier this season. He came up swinging and was ejected for the first time in his career.

Dedication has been another Dorsett trademark. "On the practice field, even when he was injured," Majors said yesterday, "he was always watching to see the schedule and flow of things. Always learning."

Although Dorsett remains the same strong-minded person Majors says he recruited four years ago ("he always has total control of things; you can't smother him"), he changed one thing last week—the pronunciation of his last name. Suddenly, it was "Dor-SETT," rather than "Dorsett," and that was a new one on his mother.

But the gold symbol he wears on the chain around his neck is not an astrological sign but simply a number "11" inside a crescent. And when photographers badgered him yesterday for someone to ask the question, Dorsett said softly, "Football players don't smile."

Yanks Buy Wynn, Add To Power

wanted to come to the Yankees even to serve as a designated hitter against left-handed pitchers, gave his approval to the way the Yankees had been spending money for quality players.

"I'm looking forward to meeting the owner and telling him, 'Hey, you're doing the right thing,'" Wynn said by telephone from his home in Escondido, Calif. "This is the way to win pennants. If you spend money on players, they're going to put out for the organization. If you make a hallplayer happy, he's going to go all out to help you win the pennant and the World Series."

Paul, who constantly looks for positive ways to spend George Steinbrenner's money, first expressed interest in Wynn early last season when he offered Rick Sawyer, a minor league pitcher, for him.

"I expected to go now," Wynn related. "I talked to Ted Turner (Braves owner) before the end of the season. They were after Matthews and I knew if they got him I was gone. I knew that Paul had been interested in me, so I told them if you get Matthews, trade me to the Yankees."

Blasts From The Past
Long ago, Wynn acquired the nickname of The Toy Cannon because he was a little guy (5 feet 9 inches, 170 pounds) who hit a lot of home runs. In 1974, after 11 seasons with Houston, he helped lead Los Angeles to the National League pennant, hitting a Los Angeles record 32 homers and driving in 108 runs. He has accumulated 250 career home runs, even more than the 30-year-old Jackson's 281.

Last season, though, Wynn stroked only 17 homers and batted .207 for one of the weakest offensive outputs of his 14-year career.

"I think he was just trying too hard to carry the load of the club," said Bill Lueck, the Braves' director of player personnel. "I think he recognized the fact that we needed a leader and he took it upon himself to be that leader."

Wynn, who was sent by the Dodgers to the Braves a year ago in a six-player swap, still made significant contributions to the Atlanta attack. He led the National League in walks with 127, had the 10th best on-base percentage in the league, .377, and drove in 66 runs, which proportionately was a good total for his 93 hits.

"I don't care about my average," said Wynn, who has a .253 career mark. "They pay me to get on base any way I can, score runs and drive in runs. Last season, I expected to play four days and rest two, but we had some injuries and I had to do double duty."

Chance to Rest White
Although Wynn probably will be a designated hitter most of the time, he could spell Roy White in left field. Furthermore, his acquisition paved the way for further deals because such players as Lou Piniella are no wexpensables.

The Yankees had shown some interest in Jeff Burroughs, a right-handed power hitter who is a Texas Ranger. But the Braves are said to have the inside track on obtaining the American League's most valuable player of 1974 because of Eddie Robinson.

Robinson, formerly the Braves general manager and now a Rangers vice president, has been in Atlanta all week and reportedly has been laying the groundwork for a deal that could involve three Braves — Ken Henderson, an outfielder; Carl Morton, a pitcher, and Bill Poceroba, a catcher.

Two Alabama Linemen To Play in Shrine Game
SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 30 (AP)—David Gerasimchuk, an offensive lineman, and Bob Baumhauer, defensive lineman, were named today to play in the Shrine East-West game Jan. 2 at Stanford Stadium. They are the first Alabama players in the game since 1944.

These others were added to the East roster: Elmo Boyd, wide receiver, Eastern Kentucky; Terry Robbison, running back, Louisiana State; Bill Bryan, center, Duke; Lou Forester, center, Georgia Tech; Mickey Marvin, offensive lineman, Tennessee; Steve Conroy, offensive lineman, South Carolina; A. J. Ruhe, defensive lineman, T.S.U.; Eddie Edwards, defensive back, Tennessee; Harvey Hull, linebacker, Mississippi State; Martin Mitchell, defensive back, Tulane; Stan Black, defensive back, Mississippi State; Andy Spiva, defensive back, Tennessee; Bill Armstrong, defensive back, Wake Forest.

on Jan. 1 against Georgia in the New Orleans Superdome.

Dorsett, who stands 5 feet 11 inches tall, began as a lanky 155-pound freshman and developed into a strong, speedy 195-pounder, who was as good an inside runner as he was on the fast outside veer pitch-and-run plays.

"It's been a long, hard season for me," Dorsett said at a news conference at the Downtown A. C. yesterday. "But this is a very proud moment of my life. I hope I can go out and live up to the meaning of this award."

Then Dorsett, known to his teammates as The Hawk, said: "I haven't reached my most important goal yet. Being the No. 1 team is that goal. We're one step away from that." If Pitt beats Georgia, the Panthers will double their record to 11-1 in the final wire service polls.

Majors described Dorsett as "just like a man possessed. He goes after something with such an intense attitude toward work. He is all seriousness at practice, not any joking around. I don't see how a guy can be so serious at practice. He would have achieved all of this without that intensity, but he would not have gotten so many big records and won this by so wide a margin without that devotion."

Dorsett said he hoped Majors would remain at Pittsburgh. Majors is currently the leading candidate for the coaching job at Tennessee, his alma mater.

Dorsett commented: "What I say won't matter because the coach will make up his own mind. I would like to have him stay at the University of Pittsburgh, however. If he decides to leave it could have an effect on the team." Dorsett was obviously alluding to the Sugar Bowl game.

Dorsett and Majors make up the first player-coach combination that finished first and second in the Heisman Trophy voting. Majors, a halfback at Tennessee, finished runner-up to Paul Hornung, the Notre Dame quarterback, for the 1956 trophy in the closest election in the history of the award. Hornung, the only player from a losing team to win the Heisman, beat Majors by only 72 points.

Asked if Dorsett would have any problems making it in professional football, Majors said: "He'll make the team the second day of practice. The first day is picture-taking day."

The Heisman Trophy, a little bronze statue of a running back in the act of straight-arming an opponent, will be formally presented to Dorsett on Thursday night, Dec. 9, at the annual dinner at the New York Hilton Hotel.

Earlier that day, Dorsett and Majors will share in accepting the Lambert Trophy for Pittsburgh as the East's outstanding major college team during the awards luncheon at the Roosevelt Hotel. This is the second time in four years that the Heisman Trophy winner was a member of the Lambert Trophy team. The previous one was John Cappelletti, Penn State's tailback, in 1973.

Value of Going to College Wins New Support

By GENE L. MAEROFF
Is college worth the time, the money and the effort? The question is being asked more and more these days, and the answer is not always in the affirmative.

conclusions quite different from those of Freeman and Hollomon. Mr. Witmer writes in the December issue of Change, a journal of higher education.

Social Return Is Cited

"The evidence suggested here is that the social return on the college investment has not in fact declined, though it may do so, relatively speaking, over the next 25 years," Mr. Witmer writes.

Pros Offer Argument

Tradesmen and salesmen are earning more than college graduates, and they are not in tens of thousands of dollars of educational loans to pay off.

However, beyond that, some educators are worried that in a climate that is not supportive of higher education, politicians may find a convenient excuse for holding down expenditures.

"Arguments about the declining value of a college education, usually presented in a very oversimplified form, play into the hands of some state officials, anxious to cut spending for budgetary or political reasons," the American Association of State Colleges and Universities said.

Sometimes overlooked in the debate about the economic value of going to college is the noneconomic benefit.

Many observers maintain that even if the earning gap between college graduates and nongraduates is narrowing, this development in itself should not mean that going to college is not worth while.

cially in behalf of a liberal arts education.

Kingman Brewster Jr., president of Yale University, objected in his annual report this fall to the notion of measuring the value of college against an economic yardstick.

"Perhaps the most fundamental value of a liberal education is that it makes life more interesting," he said. "It allows you to see things which the undereducated do not see... In short, it makes it less likely that you will be bored with life."

Yet some critics contend that Mr. Brewster's argument may have limited validity for a liberal arts program that has been watered down and even less validly for a nonliberal arts student who is accumulating most of his academic credit in some narrow career specialization.

Deficiencies Mentioned

Leon Botstein, the youthful president of Bard College in Annandale-on-Hudson, N.Y., alludes to this issue in an article, "College Could Be Worth It," that appears with the Witmer article in this month's Change.

Mr. Botstein maintains that there are many deficiencies in the education of the average liberal arts major and that these shortcomings should be addressed if colleges are to be able to argue convincingly that college is "worth it."

The controversy over the value of college could have some deleterious effects, but it also has the potential of improving higher education.

If colleges have to reassess the noneconomic benefits they provide, it may be found that there is a great deal of room for upgrading programs that do not really come close to the vision described by Mr. Brewster.

Jefferson County teachers picketing in front of Central High School in downtown Louisville, Ky., yesterday

Louisville Schools Are Closed by Strike by Teachers

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 30 (AP)—Jefferson County's teachers went on strike today, closing the nation's 18th biggest school system and giving an unexpected holiday to more than 110,000 students.

The strike was called after negotiations, assisted by a Federal mediator, failed to reach an agreement on a contract covering 5,600 teachers.

W. D. Bruce, a Board of Education official, said the strike was the result, in part, of the merger of the city and county school systems and court-ordered desegregation.

Picketing began before dawn in sub-freezing temperatures at all the county's schools and at bus compounds and school board headquarters. The police said there was no trouble.

Susan Westerman, a spokesman for the striking Jefferson County Teachers Association, said she did not know how many of the 4,500 members were on the picket lines, but that the number was substantial.

Negotiations broke off at 5 A.M. and no new talks were scheduled. Superintendent Ernest Grayson said there would be no classes until further notice.

June Lee, president of the teachers association, said it was impossible to predict how long the strike would last but that teachers were willing to reopen talks at any time.

School officials declined comment on what action they might take to halt the strike. The Kentucky Supreme Court has ruled in the past that it is illegal for public employees to strike.

Both sides said money was the main issue, although the teachers are also asking for more breaks and reduced class size. Teachers with bachelor degrees have starting salaries of $9,380 a year.

The board said Sunday night that by tapping every possible source of funds it could offer $8.1 million for raises and extra duty pay and for reducing class size.

MURDER TRIAL ENDS IN INSANITY FINDING

Mental Patient Accused of Killing Boy, 7, During a Weekend Pass From Hospital Is Acquitted

By DENA KLEIMAN

A 37-year-old former convict and drifter who, while on a weekend pass from a mental hospital, allegedly mutilated and killed to death a 7-year-old boy, has been found not guilty of murder by reason of insanity and has been returned to a state mental institution.

In a state examination of court documents disclosed yesterday that while the defendant, Erno Soto, was an outpatient at the Dunlap-Manhattan Psychiatric Center in 1972 and 1973, there were two similar murders, in which he is a suspect.

Mr. Soto, who was described by a psychiatrist at his trial as a "walking time bomb," was acquitted in the murder of Steven Cropper, whose razor-slashed body was discovered on a tenement roof on the Lower East Side in August 1973.

The killing, which was compared to the slaying and sexual mutilation several months earlier of three young boys in Harlem, drew angry community response, including a siege of the local police station. Mr. Soto has been transferred to a maximum-security mental institution.

"It could be a repeat situation," said Justice Joseph R. Marro, who presided at the preliminary trial in State Supreme Court in which Mr. Soto was acquitted. "But I am bound by the law. The law should be changed."

Justice Marro is one of many judges, legislators, lawyers and psychiatrists who have said in recent years that acquittal of a defendant on the ground of insanity is no longer responsive to society.

Two Determinations Favored

The State Commissioner of Mental Hygiene, Lawrence C. Kolb, has argued that there should be two separate determinations at a trial—one for the evidence in the case and whether the defendant is guilty of the crime, and a second for a psychiatrist's advice on sentencing.

Under the law, Mr. Soto is regarded as a criminal but as a patient, who may be released when both the Commissioner and a State Supreme Court justice find that he is no longer dangerous.

According to court documents, Mr. Soto spent an estimated total of 11 years in jail on narcotics and burglary charges. He had been treated for heroin addiction.

Mr. Soto had been a patient at the Dunlap-Manhattan Psychiatric Center on Ward 1 Island at the time of the murder of Steven Cropper.

It was Aug. 17, 1973, a Friday morning, when Mr. Soto was granted a weekend pass from the institution. That afternoon he allegedly lured Steven to the roof of 325 East Houston Street, stabbed him to death and cut a large X into his chest. Mr. Soto returned to the mental clinic that Sunday.

Mr. Soto was released from the hospital on Aug. 31. Nine months later he was arrested in the molesting of another child on the Lower East Side. He was later charged with Steven's murder.

The ritual-style murder of Steven was compared to three other mutilation killings of young boys during a 16-month period beginning on March 4, 1972.

'Grandiose Delusions' Cited

According to court documents, three days after this first murder, Mr. Soto was committed to the Dunlap-Manhattan center because he had "become violent with grandiose religious delusions." While he was still a patient, he left the hospital. It was unclear whether he escaped or was granted permission to leave. During his absence a child was sexually mutilated on April 20 in a similar way, but he did not die.

Mr. Soto returned to the hospital but was discharged on April 23. According to the documents, he was still in a "psychotic" state and was described in hospital records as being "so out of it he can't give useful information." He was to report periodically to the hospital as an outpatient but did not, and the hospital lost contact with him. In April 1973 he was again committed to the facility because of an "uncontrollable violent outburst."

In between the time the hospital lost contact with Mr. Soto and he was again committed, two boys were mutilated and slain—on Oct. 23, 1972, and March 6, 1973.

Dr. Stephen Ruchin, director of the Dunlap center, said yesterday that he was not familiar with the Soto case, but that he would "assume that when he was released he was not deemed to be dangerous."

The two psychiatrists who testified at Mr. Soto's trial said that though he was "pleasant," "cooperative," "responsive" and "coherent," he was a dangerous schizophrenic who attacked for "religious" and "ritualistic" purposes.

The history and nature of his psychosis renders him to be a dangerous person, said Dr. John Bzer Train, one of the psychiatrists. "He is in need of constant surveillance. When he is out in contact with his own, he is literally a walking time bomb."

How can a cigarette be de-tarred, but not de-tasted?

It seems hard to believe. Most low-tar cigarettes are low-taste cigarettes. So who's kidding who? If Pall Mall Extra Mild has only 7 mg. tar, how can it be an exception? The reason Pall Mall Extra Mild is de-tarred, but not de-tasted is because it has the Air-Stream filter that reduces tar—but not taste.

What's more Pall Mall Extra Mild starts with the finest tobacco money can buy. Tobaccos specifically selected for extra mild taste. And when you've got great taste to begin with, you've got great taste to end with. Try a carton. You'll find it hard to believe you're smoking a cigarette with less tar than 95% of all cigarettes sold!

Festive Chinatown Is Place of Terror to Merchants Who Offend Gangs

he walked away. Pursued, he said that he was unafraid of reporters, but "It's just the Chinese way, man. Don't want to get involved. Especially with outsiders."

Outsiders. In the rivalries that arose between American-born and Hong Kong-born youths in United States Chinatowns in the mid-1960's, the names Jook Sing and Jook Kok were their sarcastic description of each other. They are words for pieces of a bamboo plant: Jook Sing, a piece of the stalk—hollow inside, but impenetrable, walled-off at both ends—American-born, neither Chinese nor American, cut off from both cultures. Jook Kok, describing the Hong Kong-born, was the branching point—open only at one end to Chinese culture.

Now, as American-born Chinese are more often growing up outside the tenements of Chinatown, going to engineering or medical school and assimilating, the name Jook Sing might better describe the young immigrant men—the outsiders.

Expectations Not Realized

They arrive to find themselves required to go to school with children because they can't speak English. Their parents, who sent what seemed like a rich man's salary back to Hong Kong to pay for passage, turn out to be working 12-hour days and are seldom home to supervise their children. Jobs in restaurants, laundries, garment shops or groceries are the only future the immigrants see.

And their Chinese culture, too, in a sense, is slipping away. In Hong Kong the police, although tough, were Chinese. The schools, the government, the successful businessman, were all Chinese. Here the American-born who snub them are mostly the descendants of farmers from Canton Province, whom youths raised in Hong Kong or Taipei would have considered peasants. The traditions of humility, patience and deference to elders are antique shackles in America.

Taiwan, to which United States Chinatown business interests are tied, is losing political ground.

Gang Members Live Well

For the time they are in the gangs, a Chinese ex-detective said, the youths have expensive cars, good clothes and eat in fancier restaurants, places like the Hawaii Kai, the Edison Hotel, which Chinese women patronize. They are mobile in their extortion targets, ranging as far as West Milford, N. J., and Massapequa, N. Y.

Some live in apartments the gang rents and carry guns the gang bought. Some are heavy gamblers in the houses they protect. Some leave restaurants without paying, signing "Dragons" or "Eagles" to the check.

Some are polite even in robbery, asking for the loan of a wristwatch rather than being blunt. Loyalty to the gang is necessarily fierce, because the gang is the leaders' livelihood. A few have left affluent families in the boroughs. Most have dropped out of school.

One member said, "Get an education? What for? I finished high school. I work in a restaurant. If I went to C.C.N.Y., so what?"

"I used to work for my cousin in Connecticut. She has an M.A. Her husband, too. Know what they did? They opened a restaurant."

He expressed some disgust at the gambling house whose doorway he would not admit guarding. "The police ought to do something. But they never close them."

The police public morals squad says it has given gambling violations low priority because of the manpower shortage.

The Gangs' View of Police

The police say the gangs regard them as a necessarily evil and luckily restricted by rules of evidence and suspects' rights that are foreign to Hong Kong. There is only one Chinese-American police officer in Lower Manhattan. "The gangs assume that even officers with Chinese faces think like Irishmen," an ex-detective said.

The gangs are most feared by storekeepers and the elderly. According to some shopkeepers, stories of the shootings have cut business 40 percent. Young Chinese say they go out for

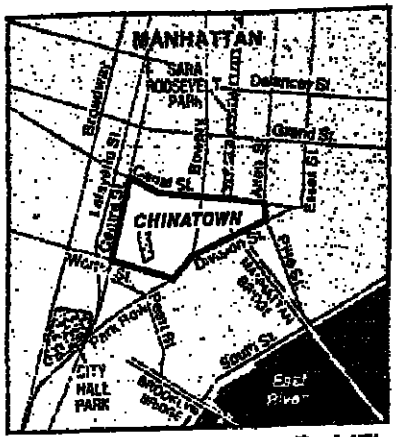

Federal Energy Chief Urges More Care in Oil and Gas Use

BOSTON, Nov. 30 (AP)—Oil and gas rationing will be inevitable if Americans continue their wasteful habits, the nation's energy research chief warned today.

Robert C. Seamans Jr., head of the United States Energy Research and Development Administration, said that the Federal Government was updating rationing plans in case another embargo is imposed by the oil exporting nations.

Mr. Seamans, at a New England Regional Forum sponsored by his agency, said an embargo was the only development likely to lead to rationing as soon as 1977.

"I don't see rationing right away or next year but it will be inevitable if we keep going along with our laissez-faire approach to conservation," he said.

The New York Times/Dec. 1, 1976

noodles late at night confident that members have no interest in them. They do fear, however, being caught in an erratic gang crossfire.

"Sometimes, a big kills another," said Richard Wong of the state Human Rights Appeals Board, "and it's the first time he's fired the gun. Maybe he's sneaked off a couple of shots down by the river to see if it works, but target practice? Where could he get that? So bystanders sometimes get killed. But I'd be extremely surprised if a cop or a white or anybody not in a gang was shot at."

Stores have been robbed at gunpoint, however. One storekeeper said she was held up by two youths who contended that they customarily got $100 or started shooting. She said they left with customers' cash and the take of a "family mah-jong parlor" upstairs.

Resistance is unlikely. Almost no Chinese storeowners have guns. They see them as an invitation to their own murder, and few were brought up knowing how to shoot.

The origins of the gangs are in several sources: American-born gangs, notably the Continentals, formed as far back as 1961 in fights with Puerto Ricans in Junior High School 65 and Italian-Americans from Little Italy. According to a City College professor, the gangs were students who committed infrequent petty crimes and felt they were protecting Chinatown.

Then, in 1965, immigration laws began to allow 15,000 Chinese a year (rather than 102) into the country. The immigrants, some of whom had been in street gangs in Hong Kong, found themselves threatened by both outsiders and the American-born, whom they quickly outnumbered. They also became aware of the huge sums of money in gambling houses, smuggling and illegal aliens that could be taken without fear that the victims would call the police.

The Tongs and the Gangs

Most residents say the On Leong and Hip Sing, the two tongs that own real estate, collect dues from businesses, adjudicate labor disputes and run the gambling houses, started the gangs. One social service director said an On Leong member losing status bled the White Eagles as lookouts, dues collectors, and bagmen in the heroin trade of the late 1960's to bolster his position.

An ex-detective said the houses, fearing robbery by Hong Kong youths, formed "youth fraternal societies" with a martial arts club and meeting place to get them off the streets. Ex-gang members say 1969 fights between the already-extant Eagles and Quon

Ying ("Other Than Eagles" who became Shadows and Dragons) hurt the tourist trade, so the tongs paid them off in jobs and cash to keep the peace.

Control of Mott Street—tantamount to control of Chinatown—was wrested from the Eagles by the Ghost Shadows in November 1974 in two weeks ended by the arrest of five Eagles for shooting up a sedan full of Shadows. (One was hit in the finger.) According to Chinatown newspapermen, the two biggest gambling parlors are on Mott between Canal and Bayard; several basements also run games of pi gow, fan tan, 13-card and 7-card poker. As much as $60,000 in house cash has been collected in a single raid; with a 5 percent house "take" (police estimate), paychecks are rich. The Eagles have since confined their activities to Elizabeth Street, the Dragons to Pell, Division and Bowery.

The Power Struggle

Several sources said the tongs sanctioned the move by cutting off payments and weapons to the Eagles because they were mugging departing winners and drawing bad publicity over gang fights. Meanwhile, the Ghost Shadows were proving themselves a daring and vicious gang—pulling a robbery with submachine guns at an American Legion Post in Eagle territory and resisting attempts by San Francisco's Wah Ching gang to first unite the factions here, then split and kill Ghost Shadows' leaders.

Since then, community leaders say, the gangs have become stronger than the tongs and, because of the reluctance of victims to testify, are nearly immune to police charges—more serious than weapons violations. In a Nov.

3 meeting on the security of Chinatown, some of these community leaders discussed proposals to get a Federal crime task force with Chinese agents to pursue gang members, to force parents to pay bail a order to force them into reforming their sons, to obtain Internal Revenue Service investigations of anyone who makes high bail (to expose the gambling houses, which they said had gang members and sometimes competent patrons arrested in raids for time spent in jail). No action was decided at the forum.

Stopgap Measures

Right now the police are putting their hopes in other stopgap measures—social services try to keep 12- and 13-year-olds from being recruited, and job and language schooling for Hong Kong-born, in which the gangs said they were interested during a short-lived August truce.

Lucas Liang, publisher The Chin Post, has proposed the formation of block associations (not affiliated with tong affiliations of the stores that would prompt storekeepers to go to the police as a group, for private security and, perhaps, give an enough of a sense of power to jostle gang demands for money and drive the parlors into that resistance.

Otherwise, the end to membership for many and the assurance that youth will not mature along Mafia lines will continue to be grim. "The young men don't want their wives hurt," Richard Wong said. Chinese women are a tremendous stabilizing influence. Perhaps deferential but behind closed doors, they often are the shots."

Now this legendary British sovereign, who captured the heart of a nation and the admiration of succeeding generations, is forever honoured on gold and silver coins unique in the history of Commonwealth numismatics. Coins you and your family will treasure and enjoy and proudly pass on to future generations.

Historic Collectors Items - Tracing An Incredible Reign

The career of Britain's most enduring monarch is reflected in an ingenious numismatic panorama on the new 1976 Turks and Caicos Islands Coins. The design is the first in the history of Commonwealth numismatics to portray another coin! In fact, it depicts four famous British coins, each of which features a portrait of Queen Victoria during a distinct phase of her long and glorious career.

Known to collectors worldwide as the "Young", "Gothic", "Jubilee" and "Veiled" portraits, each design was personally approved by the Queen for use on British circulating coins. Issued during the years 1838-1901, these coins are all now sought after as collectors items. Many are quite rare and extremely valuable.

Minted At The Renowned Royal Canadian Mint

Measuring 33 millimeters in diameter, the elegant 100 Crown coin contains 2895 Troy Ounces of pure gold. The 45 mm 20 Crown coin contains 600 grains of sterling silver and its 50 Crown counterpart is one of the largest silver coins ever issued by a Caribbean nation. This impressive coin measures 50 millimeters in diameter and contains 650 grains of solid sterling silver.

The four miniature coin reproductions on the reverse will be superbly executed in precise detail to the original British coin designs. Each portrait will be highlighted in glistening frosted relief against flawless mirror surfaces and struck many times to assure perfection in every detail. Portraits are also inset within the surface of the coin, giving the beautiful designs a dazzling three-dimensional appearance seldom seen in modern coinage!

Handsome Presentation Case And Historical Booklet Included

Each Proof coin and three-coin (100/50 and 20 crowns) collector Proof Set will be housed in a deluxe presentation case and accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity signed by A. F. Williams, Financial Secretary of the Turks and Caicos Islands documenting its legal tender Proof status.

immediate aftermath of the shooting. Police officials, including Commissioner Michael J. Codd, said the report proved that there had been no cover-up or delay by the police in responding to the shooting or in investigating it, as has been charged by the N.A.A.C.P.

The grand jury, after hearing testimony from 13 witnesses in two days, charged Officer Torsney with one count of murder. It convicted him of a maximum penalty of 25 years to life imprisonment.

Young Evans was killed last Thursday night shortly after Officer Torsney and five other policemen had responded to an unfounded report of a man with a gun at 515 Fountain Avenue, in the Cypress Hills Housing project, in the East New York section.

The $20,000 bail for the officer, who had been free since last Friday, was temporarily revoked after he pleaded not guilty before Justice Julius A. Hellendbrand. The bail revocation by Justice Hellendbrand came after George Farkas, an assistant district attorney, declared in court:

"From the facts and circumstances it appears to have been a totally unprovoked, unjustified and intentional killing. The facts of this case indicate that a man—a police officer and a human being—pulled a gun and fires into the head of another human being and then walks away without breaking stride and later on he is not able to account for himself."

Case Called 'Bizarre'

Arguing strenuously for bail, Officer Torsney's lawyer, Edward Rappaport, said "letting him in jail with people who know he is a police officer is putting him in jeopardy of his life."

Describing the case as "bizarre," Justice Hellendbrand revoked bail for the suspended policeman.

But before the officer could be transferred from the courthouse to a detention facility, Mr. Rappaport rushed to a special bail review and conviction and was granted $40,000 bail by Justice Hyman Barshay.

At the second bail hearing, Mr. Rappaport strongly hinted that Officer Torsney would plead self-defense. The lawyer said the officer had been in a dark area and had felt that a gunman might have been in the vicinity.

"As the officer left the building he was approached by the deceased and based upon our investigation he had an encounter with this young man at which time the police officer shot and killed the boy," Mr. Rappaport said. "We are embracing ourselves in the hope and presumption of innocence."

Mr. Rappaport also disclosed that the defendant had been examined by a psychiatrist chosen by the defense who had found that Officer Torsney understood the charges and could consult with his attorney. Referring to an unexplained entry in Officer Torsney's memo book that read "Happy Day, Felony day, Thanksgiving work day," Mr. Rappaport said:

"The D.A. may argue that my client is not responsible but many police officers write funny things in their memo books and this alone should not indicate a mental defect."

Moved From Home

Mr. Rappaport told Justice Barshay that Officer Torsney had been with his wife and children, aged 6 and 4, at a family Thanksgiving dinner before reporting to work at 3:30 P.M.

He said the officer and his family had been in their Richmond Hill, Queens, home because of telephone threats.

Mr. Farkas, who questioned the officer shortly after the shooting, said that the defendant had contended that he "saw some kind of shiny object on the victim and that would indicate he knew what he was doing."

However, Mr. Farkas told Justice Bar-shay that when Officer Torsney was first asked if he wanted a lawyer, he replied: "You want me to get an attorney. I can chew bubble gum also."

After being released on bail, Officer Torsney rushed away from reporters at the courthouse and drove off in a waiting car.

Two representatives of the N.A.A.C.P., who said they were "shocked and appalled" by the fatal shooting, met with Commissioner Codd at Police Headquarters. Michael Meyers, assistant director of the organization, said that the Commissioner had been asked to review efforts to protect the black community from police misconduct.

Another civil rights group, the Congress of Racial Equality, called upon Mayor Beame and Governor Carey to conduct special inquiries into the shooting.

Delays Are Denied

Commissioner Codd and two of his top commanders, John L. Keenan, chief of inspection services, and Thomas P. Mitchellson, chief of field services, denied published reports that there had been delays and irregularities in the immediate police investigation of the shooting incident.

According to department records, the shooting took place at about 11:14 P.M. last Thursday. At 11:15 P.M. a patrol car officer called for a "rush" ambulance call. The police said that at 11:19 P.M. two patrol car officers placed the fatally wounded youth in their car and sped to a nearby hospital while radiating ahead, asking that the hospital be alerted.

Police officials said that the 75th Precinct commander, whose jurisdiction the shooting took place, had informed his regional commander at midnight and that by 12:30 borough commanders were on their way to the precinct to oversee the investigation.

Chief Mitchellson, who is charge of all uniformed officers, was awakened at home 12:35 A.M. and there too, went to the 75th Precinct station house.

The police said that the Brooklyn District Attorney's office was called within 20 minutes of the shooting. Aides to District Attorney Eugene Gold confirmed that the police appeared to have acted quickly in notifying the prosecutor's office and that there had been no apparent misconduct.

Chief Mitchellson said that when he arrived at the station at 1:35 A.M. last Friday at least eight civilian and eight police witnesses were being questioned. At 2 A.M., he continued, he inspected the shooting scene and by that time forensic experts had completed their technical investigations and the site was being guarded by two officers.

Chief Mitchellson, who is black, said he also interviewed the parents of the dead boy early Friday morning and promised them that "there would be a complete investigation."

Francis J. McLaughlin, the deputy police commissioner in charge of public information, said that there had been a delay in notifying reporters of the incident because a member of his staff had failed to realize its significance.

"There was no cover-up or delays in getting the investigation going," said Mr. McLaughlin, "only a foul-up in my office in getting the news of the shooting out to the press."

Officer Torsney, a marine veteran, joined the police department in October, 1968. He is the third police officer—all of whom were white—in three years to be indicted in the slaying of a black youth. One officer, Thomas Shea, was acquitted, but he was later dismissed from the department. Another, William L. Walker, is still awaiting a trial in Brooklyn on 1973 murder charges.

In an effort to discover unfit officers, the department established in 1973 an "early warning system." Since then, officers have been reviewed because of citizen complaints, or because of their conduct while on duty.

While no officer has been dismissed because of the reviews by the personnel bureau, 141 either resigned or retired after inquiries were begun. In addition, 789 were offered some form of counseling.

Cornelius J. Behan, chief of personnel, said: "We have a good system and it's working."

Since the shooting incident, he said, Officer Torsney's record has been carefully examined and his fellow officers interviewed about his behavior. His file showed no citations, no reports of misconduct and that he never fired his gun while on duty, Chief Behan said.

"It was absolutely zero as to warnings, signs," said Chief Behan. "He was one of the most average men we've ever put across."

2,000 Mourn Randolph Evans at Emotional Funeral

By PRANAY GUPTA

The eulogies and the hymns in the First Baptist church in the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn yesterday were often punctuated by sounds of sobbing, and among the mourners who had gathered to pay tribute to 15-year-old Randolph Evans there were some who fainted, some who broke down in tears and some who screamed in anguish.

For these friends, relatives, neighbors, classmates, and even men and women who had not heard of the boy until his violent death last week at the hands of a police officer, the memory of the youth was evoked by speakers. About 2,000 persons had packed into two large chapels of the church, and hundreds more waited outside.

"There was a boy who struggled for everything that he got—he was a good boy and he was cut down," cried the Rev. Clarence Norman, pastor of the church at 450 Eastern Parkway. "The time has come when we must stand up and demand justice."

He paused for barely a moment, and then said:

"How many more Randys? No more, I say to you."

Mr. Norman paused again before saying: "His was an inappropriate death, something that should never have happened. So I ask you, how many more mothers weeping and fathers broken-hearted? How many other black boys and girls sacrificed on the altar of lawlessness?"

"No more!" the mourners shouted.

That theme was taken up, too, by another speaker—the Rev. Timothy Mitchell of the Ebenezer Baptist Church of Flatbush, Queens, who said: "We are going to be the instruments of a just and final Christ. We cannot sit idly by while our little ones are killed."

"We say to a city that has two systems of justice, we be unto you. We say to a Mayor who seemingly cares not for his black citizenry, we be unto you. We say to a Police Commissioner who allows those who are crazy and insane with racism to be allowed in our Police Department, we be unto you."

The audience applauded.

There was applause, too, when Mr. Norman announced to the congregation, which was mostly black, that the suspect in the murder, Police Officer Robert E. Torsney, had just been indicted by a Brooklyn grand jury.

At one point during the services, which lasted almost three hours, dozens of youths and older persons seated in the pews rushed up to the altar and gathered around the white metal coffin, which was open. They joined the choir in singing, and the refrains of their song, "There will be peace," were repeated by the audience.

Later, hundreds of the mourners formed lines to view the body. As they filed past, young Randolph's natural parents, Raymond Evans and Annie Brannon, watched, their eyes glistening with tears.

Then the coffin was carried to a hearse by classmates of the dead youth from the Franklin K. Lane School in Brooklyn, each of whom wore a short strip of black ribbon pinned to his clothing. The funeral cortege traveled to the Pinner National Cemetery in Farmingdale, L.I., where, in the fading light of a cold November afternoon, Randolph Evans was buried.

Three Adults and Two Children Perish in Three Fires in Brooklyn and Queens

By EMANUEL PERLMUTTER

Three adults and two children died yesterday in three fires in Brooklyn and Queens, two of which were believed to be of suspicious origin.

Meyer Melnick, 75 years old, and his wife, Rebecca, also 75, died in Kings County Hospital of asphyxiation caused when a fire in a pizza restaurant below them sent smoke up to their apartment at 1002 Ditmars Avenue in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn.

The blaze was listed as of suspicious origin because two neighbors told the police that they had seen a man with his clothes afire run out of the restaurant at about 3:30 A.M.

In the second suspicious fire, 29-year-old Richard Riegelhaupt was found dead at 1:15 A.M. in his sixth-floor apartment at 35-36 76th Street, Jackson Heights, Queens.

Mr. Riegelhaupt was found by firemen lying near the door, his hands, feet and neck intertwined by his dog's leash. His leg was lying near him, dead of smoke.

The fire marshal's office said that a flammable fluid had apparently been poured on the floor and then set afire.

Homicide detectives said that they did not know whether Mr. Riegelhaupt had tried to commit suicide, or somebody else had trussed him and set the fire.

"They said he had lived alone in the apartment since his mother died two months ago, and that he had recently lost his job. An autopsy will be performed today.

In the third fire, Ramon Rivera, 4, and his brother, Wilfredo, 2, were found burned to death at 9 A.M. in the front bedroom of their first-floor flat at 143 Thames Street, in the Williamsburg section of Brooklyn.

Their mother, Carmen Rivera, ran out of the apartment with her son, Victor, 11, shouting "Fire! Save my children!"

Her neighbors, Hercules and Marcella Reynosa, who live on the same floor of the four-story house, ran into the Rivera apartment and rescued Angelo Rivera, 2 months old, who was asleep in his crib in the kitchen. Mr. Reynosa tried to rescue the two other children, but the flames prevented him from entering their room.

The father of the children was away at work.

2 Killed in Car Crash

CANTON, Conn., Nov. 30 (AP)—The 18-year-old brother of an Olympic gold-medal winner, Bruce Jenner, and a companion died today in an auto accident, police said. They said Harold Burton Jenner, died at Hartford Hospital following the 9:51 A.M. crash, in which the car went off Old Canton Road and struck a utility pole. The other victim was identified as Judith A. Hutchings, also of Canton.

Plan for Building Jewish Cultural Center in Lincoln Center Area Hailed by Beame

Mayor Beame yesterday hailed plans for the construction of a $4.5 million Jewish cultural center in the Lincoln Center area on West 67th Street between Broadway and Amsterdam Avenue.

He praised Abraham D. Goodman, a New York industrialist and philanthropist, who will provide most of the funds for a seven-story building to be completed in 1978. He said that Mr. Goodman's contribution "proves that New York City has the best people in the world."

The complex will unite under one roof the 25-year-old Hebrew Arts School for Music and Dance, the Turbuth Foundation for the Advancement of Hebrew Culture and five schools of the Lincoln Square Synagogue, all now scattered in borrowed facilities.

To be known as the Abraham D. Goodman House, the complex will be built on about one-fourth acre of vacant land one block north of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts.

The land was purchased in 1966 by the Hebrew Arts School for $1 million and $2.5 million has been donated by Mr. Goodman for design and construction. The rest will be raised by members of the Lincoln Square Synagogue.

Noting that New York's Jewish community was the largest and most flourishing population of its kind in the world, Mayor Beame said:

"Historically, it is also one of the oldest communities in this country, going back to 1654. In this Bicentennial year, it is worth noting that New York City has been and continues to be the major crucible for Jewish expression—music, poetry, theology and scholarship."

The Mayor presented the 88-year-old philanthropist with the city's Scroll of Distinguished and Exceptional Service to the City at a crowded City Hall ceremony. He lauded Mr. Goodman for his generosity and "lifelong dedication to the highest ideals of the city's Jewish community."

Mr. Goodman, who emigrated from Russia with his family at the turn of the century, is board chairman of H. Goodman & Sons Inc., said to be the country's largest manufacturer of hair products and grooming accessories.

F.B.I. Shifting Field Office Heads

TAMPA, Fla., Nov. 30 (UPI)—Francis M. Muller Jr., special agent in charge of the Tampa office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, will leave Dec. 23 to become head of the agency's field office in New Orleans. He will be succeeded here by Phil McNeill, who is in the New York office of the F.B.I.

100 Holiday Gifts for Food Lovers

The New York Times

By MIMI SHERATON

FEW Christmas gifts bear so personal and generous a message as food; few say so directly that the donor strives to provide pleasure and delight for the recipient. That old Victorian sentiment "Love the giver," expressed traditionally on the tiny, porcelain Battersea boxes, is perhaps even better stated with a delectable morsel meant solely to delight the receiver. To express such sentiment, the food given must be the best available, which note just in time for the holiday season. The marvelous patterned sheets and towels aren't the only things Europeans snap up when they visit the United States. Young and not-so-young discotheque devotees are grabbing armfuls of the sinuous, vealing John Kloss nightgowns to wear dining, dancing and, so knows, maybe even to bed. The prices of the Cira-made signs are just about as light as the gowns—$17 to $28—and they're at just about all the major stores in such great colors as pewter, terra cotta, cinnamon, vivid blue and black. They're available in most department stores.

DISCOVERIES

Light Without Blinding

ey aren't the real thing, but they look good, serve the purpose and, best of all, won't confine you to lunchless days for the next month. They're belts with buckles inspired by Elsa Peretti at Gucci, and the price tags range from $10 for a small Peretti-horseshoe buckle to $12.95 for a double G-buckle in gold and silver combination. The leather belt colors cover almost the basics and neutrals and the place to go is Miriam Rigler, 62 West 56th Street between 10 A.M. and 6 P.M. Monday through Saturday.

When Your Luggage Needs Repair

one says the airlines are going to manhandle your luggage your next flight or that you're going to stuff the case so full that the zipper will break—but it can happen. If it does, get the luggage at John R. Geardo Inc., at 30 West 31st Street. The firm, which has been in business for years, does a lot of repair work for airlines, department stores and, of course, individuals. The most common problems are broken zippers, locks and handles, but almost anything can be fixed if Daniel and John Vieti, the men in charge, think it practical. They won't touch anything if they think it would be wasting money. The prices are high but apparently worth it to people who want good workmanship and materials. The hours are from 9 A.M. to 5:30 P.M. Monday through Friday. The telephone number is 695-6955.

Chic Cardboard in 3 Sizes word about luggage that you can't repair but that's bound to lift an eyebrow or two. Bloomingdale's has, if you're ready for it, heavy cardboard cases in three sizes, the largest of which will hold up to 40 pounds. The attached case is $7.50, the medium-size suitcase is $10 and the larger one is $12. The three fit into the another for easy storage. Some have the Bloomingdale name on them, but if that's too much for you, there are others that merely say "Chic Cardboard Box." If that's the way you always wanted to travel, the stationery department on the main floor is the place to go.

Christmas Cards for a Cause

o you haven't gotten around to buying Christmas cards yet, maybe it's just as well. Two charming but sophisticated designs can still be ordered by mail, and the proceeds go to the Cystic Fibrosis Association of Connecticut. Say whether you want the benign-looking lion and cuddly lamb on a brown background or the dove-and-heart Christmas tree on a yellow background. The cards are $6 for a box of 20, plus $1 postage for one- or two boxes. The address is 50 Washington Street, Norwalk, Conn. 06856. You're supposed to allow two weeks for delivery, so don't tarry too long.

And Now, Denim to Walk With bit of information for men with feet of any size and women with big feet. The women need big feet because, alas, the new men's for feet are for men only. To date, that is. The woman's sneaker is just around the corner or the hill—anyway, it's being considered. In the meantime, women are wearing some of the smaller men's sizes. The most popular style is the sneaker. Pre-washed denim with cloud-like cushioning and padding, and soles that are mostly gum rubber, which is supposed to be good. The Levi signature is right over the lacing. The sneakers are $14.95 in the men's shoe department at Gimbel's.

The Better to See Yourself By

he question is, do you really want to see yourself as others see you? If the answer is no, skip on to another story. If you're brave or foolhardy, read on. There's now an item called back-Rorrim (if you can't figure that out, it's mirror spelled backwards). It looks like a mirror but shows you a true reflection of yourself, not a reversed image. You can do all sorts of tricks with it (try turning it around and you're standing on your head), but the basic idea is to see the real you, and apply makeup to or shave the real you. It's all done with right angles and prisms, but we won't go into that. The Rorrim is a cube-like object, with the true reflection on one side and a mirror on the other. It's mounted in black plexiglass and it's arriving in the small leather goods department at Saks Fifth Avenue today. If your true reflection doesn't kill you, the price's may. It's $50.

'My Style In Food'

By EMLYN WILLIAMS

I HOPE the above heading does not catch the eye of any intimate friends of mine, because they won't be able to focus on this opening sentence for the simple reason they will be shaking with laughter. It will be like chancing upon a magazine piece headed "My Sex Style, by John Knox."

Because my Style has not changed, one iota, since I was 8 years old. (I hasten to add that I'm referring to food, not to the other.)

Although we were a family with meager resources, my mother was a skillful provider. But to be poor at the outbreak of World War I, in a Welsh industrial area, meant that you were going to feel the pinch. I imagine we could have been described as underprivileged, though I would never have thought of myself as such.

It did mean, certainly, that my child's palate was unlikely to be wooed into, and seduced by, the succulence of Caneton d'Anglais à la Suédoise, or the cheeky flavor of Sauzon Pisse-en-Lit Garnie à la Côte d'Azur; dishes that I've been able to make up—on paper, this minute, not over a hot stove—because I wasn't fed French, at school, and fast.

I can still read it . . . but a menu?

The Id in Your Flat

By PAUL GOLDBERGER

I DON'T know if I really want a chrome and glass table with that white couch," I overheard the young woman say. "It just looks too—well, it just looks too Bloomingdale's."

With all due respect to Bloomingdale's, an emporium of no little significance in matters of interior design, the woman had a point. What was worrying her was obviously not Bloomingdale's itself, for she admired the store's furniture and liked owning it. She simply feared that she was assembling a more-or-less packaged living environment that said more about the store's buyer's taste than her own.

She wanted not to free herself from glass tables and white sofas, but from the feeling that she herself was not.

the person in charge of creating her own living space.

The need to sense that one's home is the product of one's own instincts and desires is something everyone shares, but it afflicts single people especially. Couples, by the nature of their relationship, work around each other's needs, and often the practical requirement of compromise becomes a crucial design factor. For families with children, functional considerations become even more important. But for single people, there is no one else around whom to program one's living environment; it can emerge much more directly as a symbol of its occupant's desires.

But the freedom that single people have in this area makes the task of creating a place to live more difficult. There are no practicalities to hide behind (except, of course, the practicalities of economics) and the deeper

THOSE "Las Vegas Nites" authorized in last month's election for the benefit of religious and philanthropic organizations won't become legal until Feb. 1 at the earliest, but you would never know it from the action all over the city.

At countless temples, churches and hired halls the dice are rattling, roulette wheels are humming and blackjack and poker tables are going full blast.

There must have been 300 people at Sunnyside Gardens in Queens on Saturday night, for example, gallantly losing their money to help Congregation Lev Shevach of 674 Flatbush Avenue in Brooklyn build a new house of worship.

Why wasn't the Las Vegas Nite being held closer to home, Rabbi Michael Singer, the head of the congregation, was asked.

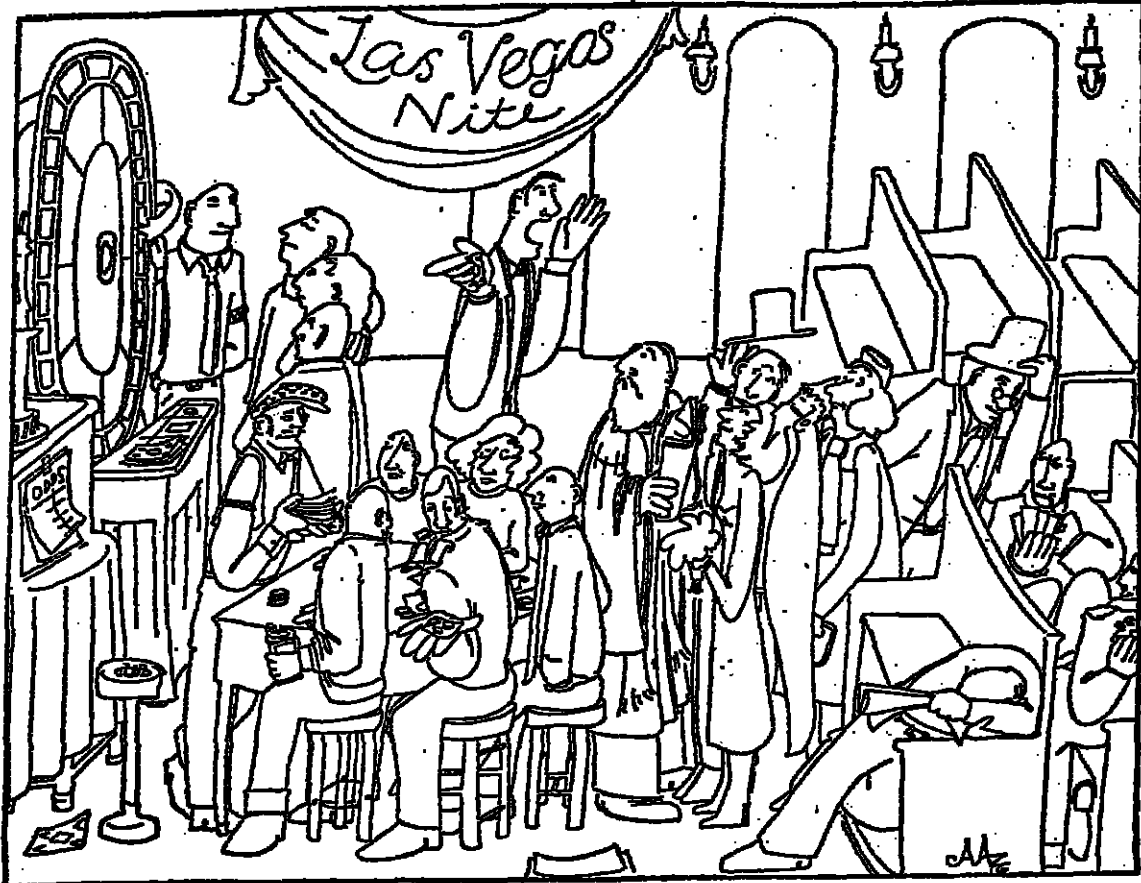

"There's no place available," he replied. "When we get our new place built it will be a different story."

Rules for these legalized gambling are being set up by the State Racing and Wagering Board. Whatever is decided on will almost certainly be an improvement over what exists now, said Diary's technical adviser, the professional gambler and scam artist who will be identified as Murray Brown.

The house is cutting $5 a hand in $1-$2 stud poker, for example, with doublets. "That works out to 15 or 20 percent of the pot most of the time. You've got to win big to stay even."

"In blackjack it's worse," he went on. "The house takes the pushes. In Vegas and everywhere else I've played if you and the dealer both get, say, 17, you keep your money. Here you lose. On craps there's a straight 5 percent commission on all bets, and that's got to grind you down pretty good, too."

"Who could have figured that when casino gambling came to New York it would be sponsored by churches?" Murray said. "Our Lady of the Dunes and Congregation Caesar's Palace."

him correctly: I have two conspicuous lacks. One is a singing voice and the other is a self-image."

One of the guests at the party was Eve Merriam, the author of "The Club," currently playing at the Circle in the Square, who, coincidentally, had submitted a singularly appropriate verse to this space only a few days before. It goes like this:

JUMPROPE RHYME FOR TODAY

Supermarket, supermarket, shelves piled high with brand new products for you to buy:

Vegetable soapflakes,
filbert milk,
frozen chicken wings ready to fry, shredded edible paper towels, banana detergent
deodorant pie.

Loretta Lombardo of Brooklyn reports seeing her first Arabic graffiti on the RR Chambers Street subway line the other day.

How could she tell, Diary asked.

"I know because it's lacy and has distinctive curls with dots," she replied. "Hebrew and Chinese are more angular and use broader strokes. Besides, there has been an influx of Middle Eastern immigrants in Bay Ridge, where I live recently, and I've seen some of their newspapers."

Howard Dietz, the lyricist whose songs include

"That's Entertainment" and "I See Your Face Before Me," told this department that he had written a verse in honor of his distinguished colleague the late Lorenz Hart, the subject of a recently published biography.

Lorenz Hart
The troubadour
Was little more Than four feet four
But measuring him
In human traits
His height was like
The Empire State's.

Even more poignant for the metropolitan motorist than the crunching of a shiny new fender or the realization that the trunk has been forced open is the sight of the implacable guardians of the "No Parking—No Standing" zones towing the car away.

Gordon Manning, who headed NBC News's Nielsen-sweeping election coverage, witnessed such a scene the other night on West 57th Street.

"Most people accept their fate passively," he said, "but not this gal. She jumped into her car just as the tow truck was starting and wouldn't get out until a scooter cop and a patrol car with a sergeant showed up."

When the crowd had dispersed and the young woman had disconsolately followed her car to the point, Mr. Manning did a little checking.

"It turned out that she had stopped at a boutique to buy a $3 costume-jewelry necklace to match a pair of earrings she had bought a couple of days earlier," he said. "It ended up costing her $65 for the towing charge, $25 for the summons and maybe $3 for the cab to get her car. For that, she could have got real gold."

ANATHANIEL HAWTHORNE scholar at Brown University is the proud custodian of a prime piece of Hawthorniana—the writer's earliest-known manuscript notebook, lost for more than 100 years after publication of excerpts from it in 1866. Professor Hyatt H. Waggoner recently authenticated what he calls "The Lost Notebook, 1835 to 1841," for Barbara Mouffe, of Boulder, Colo.

Mrs. Mouffe is a member of an old New England family, the Swanns, and last January, following the death of her mother, she inherited a huge old chest full of ancient letters and diaries, including the Hawthorne journal, the sixth of his American period to be found.

"What we learned from the notebook we could not have learned before," said Professor Waggoner. For instance, he said, Hawthorne was unusually prim in his fictional writing, not even giving a physical description of characters like Hester Prynne in "The Scarlet Letter."

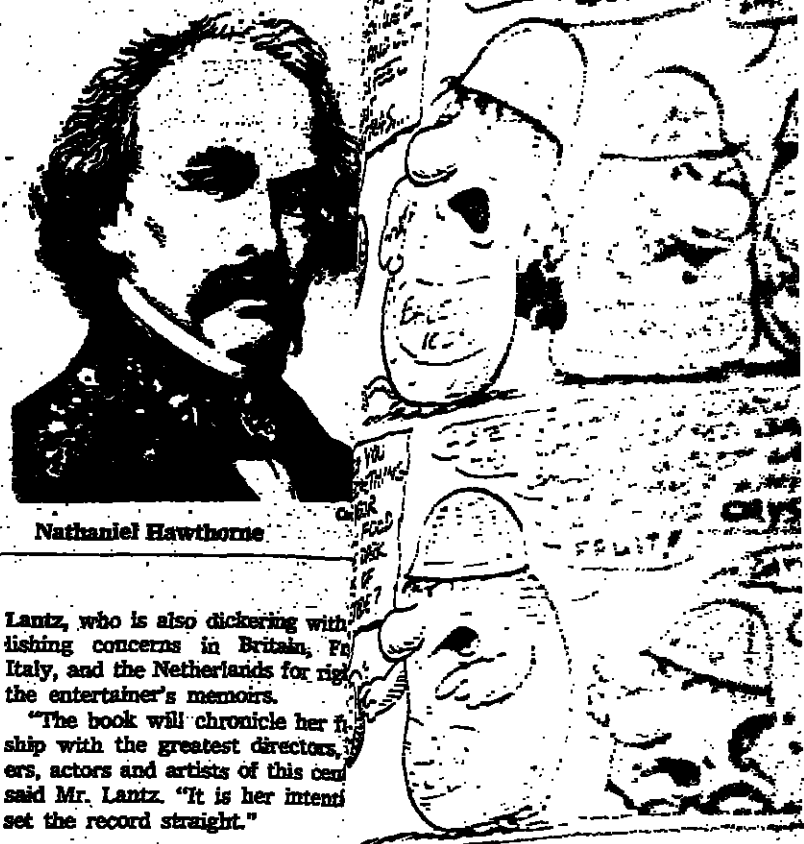

"But Hawthorne in his journal was more frank," said Dr. Waggoner. "He writes of seeing young girls, speculates on the number of petticoats they wore, and says it's 'very pleasant to see how strong winds revealed their shapes all their way to their belted waists.'" Which was pretty heady stuff for Hawthorne's times—1804-64.

Bette Midler and George Balanchine an artistic twosome? Yes. It'll be announced today that the renowned choreographer will revive his version of the Kurt Weill-Bertolt Brecht ballet, "The Seven Deadly Sins," at the New York City Ballet, and Miss Midler, known, among other things, as the Queen of Funk, will sing the narrator's role assayed at the New York City Ballet a decade ago by Lotte Lenya, Weill's widow.

In a brief ceremony yesterday afternoon, Vincent L. Broderick was sworn in as a Federal judge for the Southern District of New York. The 56-year-old Mr. Broderick, a Democrat who was in private law practice after having served as Police Commissioner of New York City from 1965 to 1968, was nominated to the coveted lifetime Federal judgeship by President Ford, on the recommendation of two Republicans, Senators James L. Buckley and Jacob K. Javits.

Marlene Dietrich has sold American rights to her forthcoming untitled autobiography to G. P. Putnam's Sons, the New York publishing house. A Putnam spokesman said that "the price was set at $200,000" and that the book would not appear until the spring of 1978 because "Miss Dietrich is writing every word of it herself" in her Paris apartment.

Rights were acquired by Putnam through Miss Dietrich's agent, Robert

"The book will chronicle his friendship with the greatest directors, actors and artists of this century," said Mr. Lantz. "It is her intent to set the record straight."

A judge in Morris County, N.J., still balking at giving a license to a submachinegun to William E. S. the outgoing Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Simon, who will return to Harding Township home where he leaves the Ford Administration in January, first asked for the permit August. County Judge Charles E. Jr. asked Mr. Simon to send him a letter explaining his need to keep a .45-caliber Thompson submachinegun as a "curio" and part of a collection. But Judge Egan said that "he wasn't enough of a collector to need a permit," and before he could issue a permit.

His granddaughter, 13-year-old Isabella, has turned up as a volunteer worker at Kibbutz Shamir, in northern Israel near the Lebanese Syrian border.

"So what?" she said. "I don't have to make good for what grandfather did. I don't believe in biblical phrase that the sins of fathers are visited upon the children. I think my grandfather believed in his own words, but I don't condone what he did. I don't like to talk about him."

Oh, for a Candy Store Malted...

By MURRAY SCHUMACH
in their candy store, from sunrise to midnight and without a day off. They craved a vacation. One day the man was idly rubbing a soda bottle when out popped a fatheaded genie who said he would grant any wish. The couple, after being assured that he could run a candy store, asked for and left on a vacation.
In came a customer, who told the new man in the stained white apron behind the soda fountain. "So make me a malted."
And the genie, with appropriate magic words and flourishes, converted her into a malted.
The "New York" malted degenerated as candy stores perished by the thousands, to be replaced by fast-food establishments and luncheonettes that offered concoctions made without malt and too sweet or so thick that they had to be eaten with a spoon.
Jack Polin owns the 51-year-old Packard Food Products Company, of 1372 Herkimer Street, Brooklyn, which used to sell malt to more than 1,000 candy stores. "Now we don't even bother to sell malt," he said. "I don't know what they make malted out of any more."
The Wise Encyclopedia of Cookery offers this recipe for what to call the "chocolate malted milk": "1 to 1 1/2 ounces of chocolate syrup (sic), 3 rounded teaspoons of malted milk, a small scoop of ice cream and 1 cup of milk. Shake thoroughly. Top with whipped cream. Serves 1."
Jerry Smith, one of the few remaining artists of malted cuisine, scoffed at this. He mastered the art when he ran candy stores in the Bronx, after having developed his palate as a boy at candy stores on and near Delancey Street. He has seen the price of a malted go from 5 to 85 cents.
"The secret of the malted is instinct and loving care," he said. "Also, very cold milk and good-quality ice cream."
Mr. Smith, now a counterman at the Continental Coffee Shop, 107-29 71st Avenue, Forest Hills, Queens, makes a malted as follows:
He takes one scoop of ice cream—the No. 30 scoop, which is about average. From the cooler, he ladles milk into the metal container, working by eye but usually reaching the second marker. Then he adds a shot and a half of syrup and lets the mixture churn for about a minute and a half. He does not use a watch and is usually serving other customers while the machine is working. Yet he knows when to turn off the machine.
"I can tell by the sound," he said. "Malted mixers start with a growl and end with a hum."
Howard Altman and Anthony DiMiccilli own the shop where Mr. Smith works. It has been there about 35 years. Mr. Altman said that when important tennis matches were played at the nearby Forest Hills Stadium, "we get lots of out-of-towners coming in for a 'New York' malted."
"All these years—they've been hearing from ex-New Yorkers about malted," he said.
"You'll notice," he added, "that when Jerry makes a malted he puts the container on the counter."
And there is always enough for a refill.

60-Minute Gourmet

Pierre Franey
A QUICKLY made meal and a dinner with style are by no means mutually exclusive, and one of the most concrete expressions of that proposition is the menu with recipes outlined below. The heart of this meal is one of America's choicest and most elegant cuts of meat—a tender, succulent rack of lamb.
The cost of a rack of lamb is, admittedly, somewhat elevated, but when this meal is thought of as a somewhat special dinner for four, the cost may not seem all that abhorrent. The cost of two racks of lamb to serve that number is about $8.
When the lamb is purchased, it is best to have the butcher prepare it for cooking precisely as indicated in the recipe. Remember that fast-cooking is essential to a proper rack of lamb. The total cooking time from the moment the lamb is placed under the broiler until it is taken from the oven should be from 12 to 16 minutes. This should insure that the center of the meat ranges from pink to red. If the meat is overcooked, it will become grayish and not be so moist and succulent.
Grilled tomatoes and a purée of potatoes go well with the lamb and they are recommended as the remaining components of the main course. (If you want to fudge a bit, you may replace the puréed potatoes with a good brand of store-bought shoestring potatoes.)

Game: Glorious Without Being 'Gamey'

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE

Game, be it winged or four-legged, furred or feathered, certainly ranks high on the most coveted dishes of the late autumn and winter table. It is in league with fresh oysters, fresh foie gras and new beanjoints—something to titillate and glorify the palate.

Over the years we have learned, somewhat to our surprise that Americans by and large are not all that conversant with proper techniques of game cookery. Not even those whose larders may be filled with the likes of venison, pheasant and quail.

To some palates the "wild" flavor of game is anathema, but what the average home cook doesn't seem to realize is that the flavor called "gamey" is mostly man-induced. It comes about through the use of a marinade, a spiced liquid generally consisting of red wine, vinegar, onions, bay leaves, thyme and so on. The purpose of a marinade is both to impart flavor to a dish and to aid in tenderizing the flesh.

There is another method for tenderizing and giving flavor to game and that is through aging. In Europe, one traditional method for hanging woodcock is to suspend them by the tail until a drop of blood starts to fall from the beak. The position is then reversed, the bird hung by the beak until a drop of blood starts to fall from the other end. This is continued over a period of days—the surroundings in which this occurs should be no warmer than 40 degrees—until the desired degree of ripeness is achieved.

In our childhood we had little or no experience with game preparation other than the braised or roast quail on which we invariably dined every Christmas morning. But these quail were not hung nor marinated. They were freshly killed, broiled in butter in a heavy iron skillet, covered with a lid and "smothered" until they were fork tender. The birds were succulent and served with a light brown sauce, and the memory is warm and inescapable. Our only regret in those days was that there were never enough quail to satisfy our childish appetite—only two quail for each member of the family.

Years later, while living in a small, one-room apartment in Chicago, our Christmas gifts included a chafing dish and two pheasants. We had read in one book or another that "all game should be hung" to tenderize it. "By the neck," the instruction book added.

Well, we arrived in that cubicle—the bed, the kitchen sink and stove were all in the same room—and tied a string around the neck of each pheasant and hung them up to "mortify" or "faisander" the birds as the French say. We had invited friends for a weekend feast, thinking to devastate them with those birds, properly leached with strips of salt pork and roasted.

It was very warm in that apartment and ventilation was poor. Along about Wednesday there was an uneasy feeling that something was going awry. By Thursday there was no doubt about it. We disposed of the birds by tossing them into the driving snow out the kitchen window. If memory serves, that weekend's guests were devastated with something like spaghetti and meat balls.

We offer here a fair assortment of game dishes including a marvelous ragout of venison and a roast saddle of venison. The roast quail is a delight, particularly for a late, lazy Sunday breakfast.

It is not true that all game, to be excellent of flavor, must be marinated.

To the contrary, rib or loin chops of young venison are tender and delicious when cooked like other young chops, such as lamb. And don't forget that young venison makes excellent hamburgers. And chill con carne.

There are numerous shops in Manhattan that deal in game. Among them are Balducci, 424 Avenue of the Americas (between Ninth and 10th Streets); Iron Gate Products Company, 424 West 54th Street; Lobel Brothers, 1096 Madison Avenue (near 82d Street); Ottomani Brothers, Ltd., 1155 First Avenue (between 63d and 64th Streets); Oxford Market, 907 Madison Avenue (between 72d and 73d Streets); Piccini, 633 Ninth Avenue (between 44th and 45th Streets); and Regent Food Shop, 1174 Lexington Avenue (between 80th and 81st Streets).

Roast Quail

8 wild or domestic quail (see note)
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
1/4 pound lean fatback
1 tablespoon butter
1/2 cup water

1. Preheat the oven to 450 degrees.
2. Sprinkle the quail inside and out with salt and pepper. Truss them neatly.

3. Cut the fatback into eight slices of approximately the same size. Drop the slices into boiling water. Simmer about 10 seconds and drain.

4. Add the slices to a roasting pan or oven-proof skillet large enough to hold the birds. Cook them until rendered of their fat and crisp. Add the quail and turn them on all sides in the hot fat. Add the butter and place in the oven. Bake about 30 minutes, turning the quail frequently so that they brown evenly all over. Remove and reserve the quail and fatback.

5. Pour off the fat from the pan and add the water, stirring to dissolve the brown particles that cling to the bottom and sides. Untruss and discard the trussing string. Serve the quail whole with two pieces of fatback for each serving and the pan juices. Serve, if desired, with sautéed mushrooms.

Yield: 4 servings.
Note: Frozen quail from Canada, packaged two to the box and bearing the name Galina, are widely available in many groceries and supermarkets on the East Coast.

Grilled or broiled tomatoes are an excellent accompaniment for this dish.

Pheasants au Chambertin

4 pheasants weighing approximately one and three-quarters to two pounds each
2 tablespoons peanut, vegetable or corn oil
1/2 cup chopped carrot
1/2 cup chopped onion
1/2 cup chopped celery
1 cup chopped mushrooms, optional
12 juniper berries, crushed
2 bay leaves
4 shallots, thinly sliced
3 cups Chateau-Chambertin or other burgundy wine
2 cups chicken broth
4 cups water
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

10 tablespoons butter
1/2 cup cognac
2 tablespoons flour

1. Cut the pheasants as follows: Separate the legs from the thighs. Split the breasts in half. Bone the breast halves, but leave the main wing bone attached. Reserve all the bones such as the backs, necks, breast bones and so on.

2. Heat the oil in a heavy skillet and add the reserved bones. Cook, stirring frequently, until golden brown on all sides, about 30 minutes. Pour off the fat.

3. Add the chopped carrot, onion, celery, mushrooms, juniper berries, bay leaves and shallots. Cook, stirring often, about 15 minutes. Add half the wine, the chicken broth, water and salt and pepper to taste. Cover and cook for one hour.

4. In another heavy skillet, heat eight tablespoons butter and add the meaty pheasant pieces, skin side down. Cook, turning as necessary, until golden brown all over.

5. Pour the cognac over the pheasant pieces and ignite it.

6. Pour the bone and wine sauce into a foodmill to strain the sauce. Push the solids with the back of a wooden spoon to extract as much liquid as possible. Discard the solids. Add the sauce to the pheasant pieces. Add the remaining wine and partly cover. Simmer about 45 minutes if the pheasants are young and tender. Cook longer if necessary.

7. If desired, remove the pheasants and strain the sauce again. Bring the sauce to the boil. Blend the remaining two tablespoons butter with the flour and add it gradually to the sauce, stirring constantly. Return the pheasant to the sauce and serve hot.

Yield: 8 to 12 servings.

Selle de Venaison Roti (Roast saddle of venison)

1 six-pound saddle of venison
3 pounds meaty venison bones, preferably taken from the ribs
1/2 cup vinegar
2 sprigs fresh parsley
2 carrots, trimmed, scraped and cut into rounds
1 onion, peeled and coarsely chopped
2 leeks, trimmed, split down the center, washed and chopped
2 ribs celery, chopped with leaves
2 crushed cloves garlic
12 juniper berries
1 teaspoon leaf sage
1 teaspoon crushed coriander seeds
1 teaspoon crushed rosemary
1 teaspoon crushed marjoram
4 cups dry red burgundy or enough to cover the meat
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

1. Prepare the marinade and add the venison pieces. Str and cover with foil. Refrigerate four or five days, no longer.
2. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.
3. Remove the meat from the marinade and set it aside. Drain the vegetables, reserving the solids and the liquid. There should be about four cups of liquid.
4. Heat two tablespoons of oil in one or two medium-size skillets. Brown one-third of the meat at a time. As the meat is browned, transfer it to a kettle. Use more oil as necessary to cook the meat. The total time for browning the meat should be about 10 minutes.
5. Add a little more oil to a skillet, and cook the reserved solids over high heat about five minutes. Add this to the meat.
6. Sprinkle the flour over all and stir to coat the pieces more or less evenly. Cook about three minutes and add the reserved liquid. Add salt and pepper to taste. Bring to the boil and cover. Place the kettle in the oven and bake two hours.
7. Remove from oven, tilt the kettle and skim off the excess fat from the surface. Add the jelly and stir until dissolved. Simmer five minutes on top of the stove.
8. Meanwhile, cut the salt pork into matchlike "batons." Put them in a saucepan, cover with water and bring to the boil. Simmer one minute and drain.
9. Peel the onions and combine them in a saucepan with water to barely cover, salt to taste, the butter and sugar. Cook until liquid evaporates and the onions start to take on a brown glaze.
10. Heat a skillet and add the pieces of salt pork. When crisp, remove the pieces with a slotted spoon and set aside. Add the mushrooms to the rendered salt pork fat. Sprinkle with salt and pepper to taste and cook, stirring as necessary, about 10 minutes. Drain well and set aside.
11. Add the onions to a skillet and add the salt pork and mushrooms. Cook briefly about five minutes. Sprinkle this mixture over the venison and cook 10 minutes. Serve with buttered fine noodles.
Yield: 12 or more servings.

5. Remove the meat and bones from the marinade and set aside. Reserve the bones for making the sauce for venison in another recipe.
6. Strain the marinade and reserve both the liquid and the vegetables. These will be used to make the sauce for the venison in another recipe.
7. Ideally a saddle of venison when ready for cooking has a tough, somewhat leatherlike skin across the top of the meat. This may, in some cases, have been trimmed away. If it has not, split the leathery skin down the center with a sharp knife. Working with the fingers and the knife, pull and cut away the leathery skin, separating it as closely and neatly as possible from the meat. Cut down to but not through the base of the tough skin on both sides, making, in effect, two flaps. Open up the flaps. If desired, and preferably, the top of the meat should now be larded with salt pork. To do this, soak the salt pork strips briefly in cognac. Using a larding needle, insert it into the top of the meat. Slip one salt pork strip into the end of the needle and pull it through. Continue larding the meat at various points until all the salt pork is used. Sprinkle the meat all over with salt and pepper. Fold the leathery flaps back over toward the center and tie with string to keep the flaps in place. If the leathery covering is not used, cover and the two large thin sheets of fatback or salt pork on top of the meat.

8. Place the venison in a baking dish and bake for 30 minutes (unless you want your meat well done, in which case bake it up to an hour). Untie and cut away the leathery flaps or remove the sheets of salt pork. Discard them. Return the roast to the oven and bake 20 minutes longer, basting occasionally. Serve carved in thin, lengthwise slices with the poivrade or piquante sauce spooned over. Carve and serve also the filets underneath the saddle.
Yield: 12 or more servings.

Sauce Poivrade (Pepper sauce for roast venison)

3 pounds meaty venison bones with the marinade and vegetables reserved from the recipe for selle de venaison roti (roast saddle of venison), see recipe
2 tablespoons corn oil
1/2 cup flour
1 teaspoon coarsely ground black pepper
2 cups dry red burgundy wine
1/4 cup dark currant jelly
3 tablespoons butter

1. Prepare the first steps of the selle de venaison recipe. Remove the bones as indicated and strain the marinade. Reserve the vegetables, bones and marinade in separate bowls.
2. Preheat the oven to 400 degrees.
3. Heat the oil in a large, heavy skillet and brown the bones thoroughly on all sides. Transfer the bones to another utensil and leave the fat in the pan. Add the drained vegetables and cook, stirring, about five minutes. Add these to the bones.
4. Sprinkle the flour over the fat remaining in the skillet and add the pepper. Using a wire whisk, add four cups of the burgundy liquid and the two cups of red wine. Bring to the boil and simmer, stirring occasionally, about 20 minutes. Add the wine mixture to the bones. Cover and place in the oven. Bake two hours.

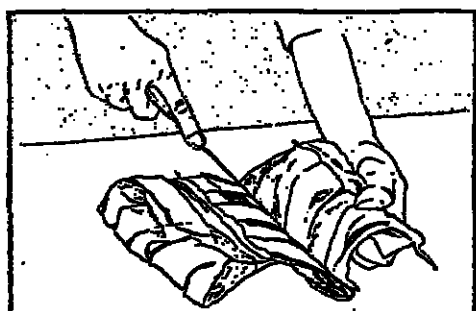

5. Strain the sauce, pressing with the back of a wooden spoon to extract as much liquid from the solids as possible. Discard the solids. Add the sauce to a saucepan and stir in the jelly. Swirl in the butter and serve piping hot without boiling further.
Yield: About three to four cups of sauce.

Marinade for Game

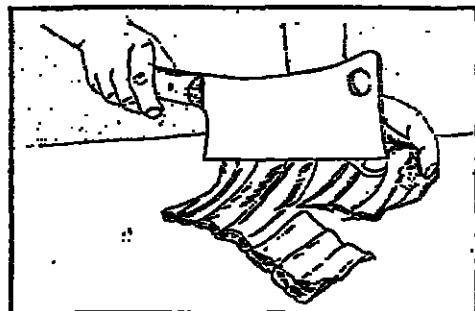

1/2 cup red wine vinegar
1/2 teaspoon dried marjoram
1/4 juniper berries, crushed
1 bay leaf
1 teaspoon rosemary
2 whole cloves
1/2 teaspoon thyme
10 peppercorns
4 cups dry red wine
1 cup coarsely chopped celery
1 cup thinly sliced carrots
1 cup quartered small onions
2 sprigs parsley
Salt to taste

1. Combine in a saucepan one-quarter cup of red wine vinegar, the marjoram, juniper berries, bay leaf, rosemary, cloves, thyme and peppercorns. Bring to the boil and simmer about five minutes.
2. Empty the mixture into a stainless steel or enamel bowl and add the remaining ingredients. Use as a marinade for game.
Yield: Two quarts, approximately, or enough marinade for five pounds of venison.

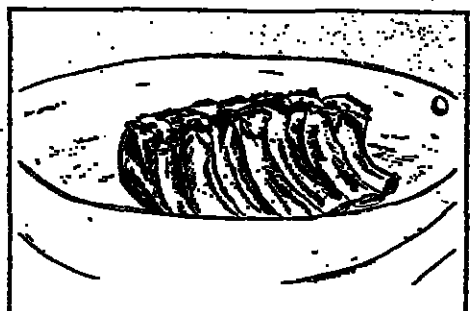

How to Prepare a Rack of Lamb

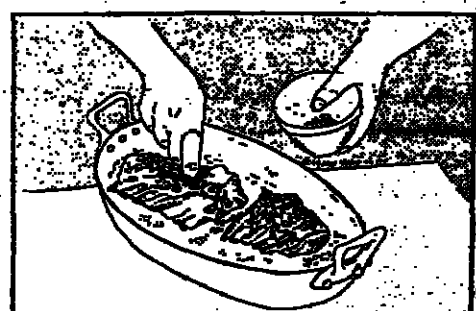

To prepare a rack of lamb, almost all the surface fat should be cut away from the meat and bones. The top, long chine bone has already been removed.

Hack off the ends of the ribs, leaving about one and one-half inches of the ribs intact and extending from the loin of meat.

Place racks, meaty side down, in a baking dish. Broil about two or three minutes on one side. Turn and broil similarly on the other side.

Sprinkle with bread crumb and parsley mixture and bake at 500 degrees for 8 to 10 minutes.

Sweets And Meats Make No A Treat

By MARCIA DAVENPORT

Long ago, in the days when there were cooks to hire and fire, I employed briefly a well-recommended Finnish cook. I told her my tastes and preferences and left her to match them to her talents. A roast of prime beef was and is the supreme favorite in my house. I told the cook that I also carved at table and wished no guests on the platter.

Came the dinner and the roast of prime beef was served, and I was entirely surrounded by a wreath of sliced oranges.

There is no creation of Nature—only that which man makes. But the sweet places for fruit and sweetening, or anything sweet, is with meat or poultry. With the festive season upon us, man's tables will be the site of atrocious committed in the name of tradition: roast turkey, goose, duck, game, and other meats and birds. And this assault upon nature, good taste and good will is a sad increase, for kangaroo jumps all across the business of cooking, eating and even half-cuisine. The whole world is throwing sugar, fruit juice, honey, oranges, apples, bananas, pineapples, prunes, grapes, raisins, pears, anything off trees, into its meat and poultry and do-ahead casseroles.

We all know the origins of fruit as sweet stuff in meat and savory dishes. They come from northern Europe, especially Scandinavia. Many of them are relics of the Middle Ages, when meat and poultry were so rank that exotic spices, fruits, syrups, perfumes and even gold leaf were invoked to get the food past the nose and the eye. The rich, luscious, this conspicuous consumption, Pease porridge fed the common man.

Or else sweet and fruity cooks came from Asia, North Africa and other tropical locales. Obviously, in countries that drink red wine. Sweet stuff and fruit will make any red wine—from California jug to Chateau Ch val Blanc—taste like red ink.

If you really enjoy red wine and want your guests to enjoy it, be strong minded. Rule out anything containing fruit or sugar or heaven forbid, honey or maple syrup as side-dish, stuffing, garnish or other accessory to meat or any savory food.

Don't be intimidated by tradition like cranberry sauce with turkey, apple stuffing or sauce with goose, orange or cherries with duck, reindeer or lingonberries with game, currant jelly with anything, Cumberland sauce with venison, raisins in the platter. I don't serve mince sauce with lamb. I don't serve stuffings that contain apples, raisins, prunes, apricots, glazes of honey, brown sugar, candied fruit juices, commercial glaze, garnishes of candied plu-apple, peaches or fresh ones, foie gras, shamel and other fruits.

French chefs who hated and wanted to mock their employers must have devised ducking bigarade, an abominable concoction in leatherness only by Montmorency—cherries, sweet gubey, candied black cherries, visited on hapless ducks, squabs and other poultry.

Veronique—white grapes—is a related horror, and as though chicken with white grapes were not sickening enough, sole veronique—fish with fruit—is the ultimate outrage.

It is hard to locate any well-cooked Chinese dish, but even some Chinese food can go wrong with me. I will not eat their sweet-and-sour, nor their dishes that contain ketchup or chili sauce, nor those visually beautiful concoctions that glitter with honeyed sauces that cover pineapple, ichee and other fruits.

And the Italians, who commit few culinary outrages, make one horrible substance called mostarda, which they serve with bolito misto, a dish too heavy and filling for any but ironclad stomachs.

Mostarda is a mixture of fruits cooked in a thick glaze of sugar syrup spiked with mustard. The bolito is an assortment of beef, chicken, veal, cotechino (a sausage shaped like a pig's trotter) and sundry meats boiled together and carved with elaborate ceremony.

The other invariable accompaniment is salsa verde, a mess of parsley, anchovy, capers, sour pickles, etc., bound with a smashed potato in olive oil. Ada Boni, the final authority on Italian cooking, describes the bolito as being like Desdemona's nightgown, a malignant star, and says its appearance on the table is enough to choke the atmosphere.

Perhaps mostarda was devised to warm things up; to me, it is like all sweet and fruity garnishes, an incitement to throw up.

In my view, there are exactly two permissible uses for sugar in cooking: nonsweet food; a grain or two when cooking lima beans; a grain or two when gliding little onions in butter.

As for other uses, it is time somebody howled.

I do.

For a Change of Pace, Take a Gambol on Lamb

PALATES sated with turkey might be revived this week with a gambol in lamb by market investors who can accept the theory of relativity in bargains.

Compared to other meats, and compared to its own price in previous years, lamb is not exactly cheap, according to the New York State Department of Agriculture and Markets.

But the wholesale price has dipped, and some supermarkets—eager to inject a little variety into the "special" scene—are offering sales in some cuts. Loin chops, for example, are being offered at prices ranging from $1.99 to $2.69 a pound. The range for rib chops is $1.79 to $2.39; and shoulder chops run from $1.49 to $1.79. On sale, oven-ready leg of lamb is priced at $1.19 to $1.39.

Real bargain hunters might head out as swiftly as possible to rummage around in the store freezers, where some of the sale-priced turkeys of last week are still available. Chances are they'll be gone by the weekend, but while they last, they are the A-vis that No. 1, at least as something of a novelty.

Broiling and frying chickens—regulars on the bargain list—remain an excellent buy at 39 to 49 cents a pound of sale.

Too much wet weather, increased transportation costs and increased labor costs are among the factors that are making most fresh vegetables considerably more this week than during the corresponding period last year.

Broccoli, for example, is 89 cents a bunch, compared to 69 cents last year. Other vegetables up in price are Brussels sprouts, cabbage, carrots, cauliflower, celery, cucumbers, escarole, green peppers, lettuce and tomatoes.

Running counter to this trend are potatoes. On a per pound basis, costs run from a dime or 12 cents a pound for potatoes of the all-purpose type sold in 10-pound bags, and from 14 to 16 cents a pound for the five-pound bags. Sales bring these prices even lower.

Among fruit, there is not much change this week. The bargains tend to be among the citrus fruits, thanks to an abundant Florida crop.

Grapefruit are especially good buys at 10 to 20 cents apiece, depending on size. Anjou pears are still reasonably priced, as are bananas. And Cortland apples, good for eating fresh and good for baking, are available at 69 to 89 cents for a three-pound bag.

Fans of tuna are being advised by Elinor Guggenheimer, the city's Commissioner of Consumer Affairs, to stock up if they find a store offering cans of tuna on sale.

"Tuna prices are now at the highest level we've seen since the Department began monitoring food costs in May 1973," she said, "and the cost is expected to continue increasing."

According to the Department of Consumer Affairs, the price of a 6½-ounce can of tuna increased last week from 79 to 81 cents—14.8 percent higher than the price last year.

Mrs. Guggenheimer described the current increase as an example of consumers being asked to pay now for shortages that might occur in the future. After Jan. 1, new standards will take effect to abolish the incidental killing of porpoises by tuna fishermen. These standards will affect about half the United States' annual tuna catch.

Mrs. Guggenheimer said: "At present, tuna supplies are 35 percent above last year's figure and demand is decreasing. According to all of the traditional laws of economics, an increase in supply and a decrease in demand should result in a price reduction."

"Yet," she went on, "two nationally advertised brands of tuna recently announced price hikes which are evident in this week's retail price."

A Guide to Becoming Wok-Wise

By FRED FERRETTI

The Chinese have been cooking with it for at least a thousand years, but it's never been what could be classified as a fad over there. It hasn't been in America nearly that long but already it's a passion.

These days, it seems, everybody has a wok, and those who haven't say they simply will have to get one at the earliest because they are so taken with Chinese cooking.

Carbon steel woks, stainless steel woks, aluminum woks, electric woks, all variations on the traditional concave. Department stores create Chinese boutiques around them. Industrial designers find ways to embellish them with colored enamels. Manufacturers of gourmet cookware gussie them up in attractive cartons with all sorts of utensils and cookbooks and sell them as one-stop courses in Cantonese cuisine.

The wok, which is shaped somewhat like an oversized shallow soup plate, with handles, is not a pot, nor is it a fry pan. Rather it is a fortuitous combination of both. Its shape permits foods to be tossed rapidly in and out of a dash of hot oil during stir-frying, without becoming in the least greasy. That same shape permits creation of a large steamer simply by covering it with a wok cover.

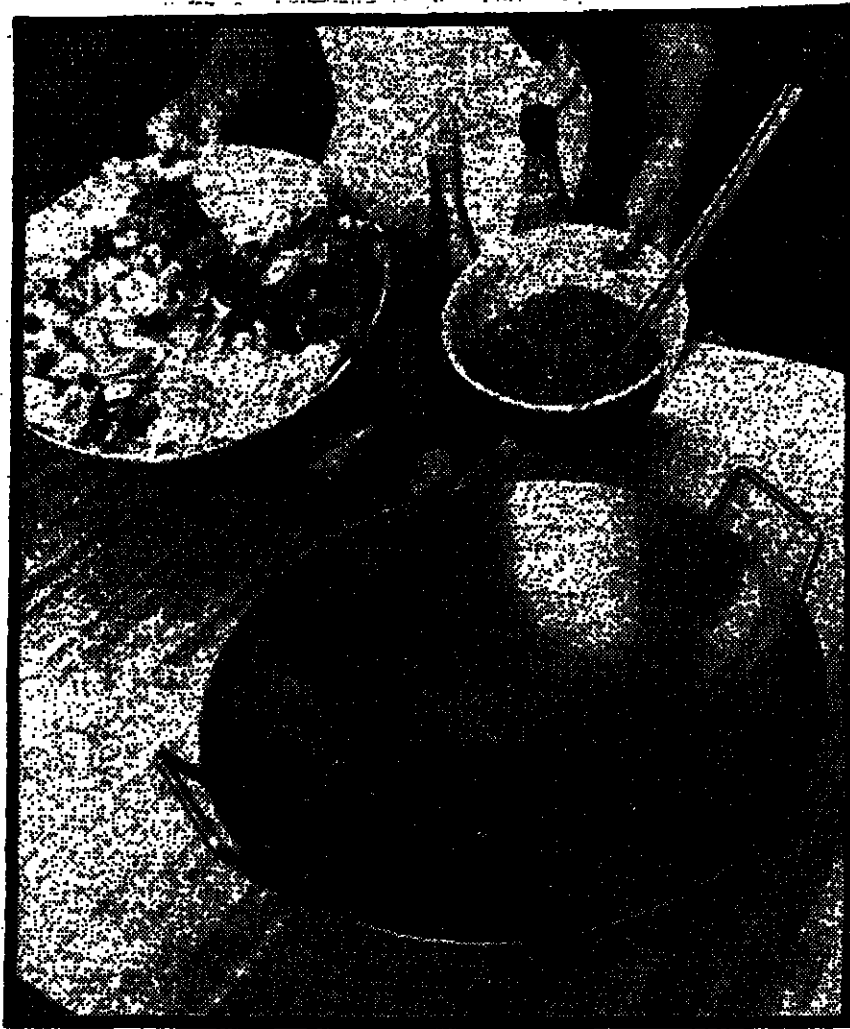

It has become one of the first basic cooking containers bought by newlyweds. It is the subject of lively party talk. People boast of being "two-wok" families. The more sophisticated buy different sized woks and woks of different materials to use for different purposes. Young people are attracted to its use not only because of the enormous popularity of Chinese cooking these days, but because cooking with a wok is cooking naturally, without processing.

Unfortunately many people buy the wok they see first. So it should be said at the outset that stainless steel woks, while pretty, do not perform as well as carbon steel.

The stainless is generally too thin and gets too hot too quickly, which permits no control over the heat of the wok. With electric woks the coil at the base is generally too small to permit the spread of heat throughout the bowl. Aluminum of the slightly thicker type is ideal for steaming, but less than ideal for stir-frying.

For stir-frying the carbon steel wok is ideal. Though it is not at all pretty, particularly when it is bought covered with heavy oil, when cleaned and seasoned it is almost the only cooking pot that one could need. Carbon steel woks come in various sizes, the smallest 10 inches in diameter, and so on in two-inch steps: 12 inches, 14 inches, 16 inches, and so on. Restaurant woks can be enormous. For the home, just about the largest that can be handled is 20 inches.

The best size for all-purpose home use

is 14 inches and it can be bought in most food stores and hardware stores in Chinatown for about $4.50. It is also recommended that woks with twin metal handles be used.

A wok once bought should be washed in extremely hot water with a bit of liquid detergent, to remove the oil coating, and then seasoned by rubbing with vegetable oil. After this, soap should never be used on a carbon steel wok. It should be wiped clean of oil after use, rinsed in very hot water and dried over flame on a stove top.

Necessary utensils to use with a wok are a bamboo-handled, aluminum-framed, brass-wired strainer called a "Jow Lei" for deep-fat frying and to drain vegetables and a carbon steel spatula called a "Wok Chan." These cost about $2 each.

In addition an aluminum cover, necessary for steaming, should be purchased, for about $4.30, as should a tin or steel ring that sits around a stove burner and into which the wok nestles. This costs about $1.25. Bamboo chopsticks can be bought for about 50 cents for 10 pairs. The basic wok kitchen will cost under $20, when bought separately in this fashion, and will be of the best quality.

Aluminum woks sell for about $15 for one 15 inches in diameter and are made by the better American manufacturers for the better department stores. Because they are more shallow than the Chinese-made carbon steel woks, and are made with high covers they are just fine for steaming, particularly fish.

For stir-frying for which the wok is most often used, about one-and-a-half to three tablespoons of oil, preferably peanut oil, but any vegetable oil is fine, are sufficient to cook vegetables and sliced and shredded meat, Chinese fashion. But food should not be put into oil until it is properly hot.

It is easy to gauge the right heat. A slice of ginger dropped into oil will turn light brown at the right temperature for stir-frying; and a piece of garlic will turn brown at the proper heat.

One other point: Woks perform best over gas flames. Heat is difficult to control on electric ranges, but it is recommended that the highest level heat be used for wok cooking, and if two metal rings be used, one over the heated coil and one to place the wok in for heat control.

For experimenters the wok can be used as an excellent deep-fat fryer. Well, French fried potatoes, sprouts, chicken, duck, sweet and sour pork, fantail shrimp, all fry beautifully and deeply in a wok, where they are controlled better than in a deep fryer or in a traditional frying pan.

In fact, one way to season a wok is to cook french-fried potatoes in it right off.

To use the wok as a steamer, put three to four cups of water should be poured into it. Over the water pairs of chopsticks should be placed (or a baking rack). They should touch the water. While steaming, if any water should be kept on hand to replenish whatever might evaporate.

Any vegetables are cooked better in a wok, stir-fried lightly, left crisp and not cooked into flavorlessness, as happens with traditional pots. Or, if vegetables such as string beans, green peppers, onions, celery, cabbage, carrots can achieve some parity with fresh bok choy, silk squash, chestnuts, snow peas, bean sprouts, choy sum (small, sweet bok choy), Chinese broccoli and white turnip when stir-fried in a wok.

And after a few turns with a wok, you might achieve some parity yourself, perhaps progress from faddish cook-

(Stir-Fried Chicken With Chinese Vegetables)

Eileen Yin-Fei Lo teaches Chinese cooking in her home in Montclair, N. J., and often writes on the subject. Here are two recipes from her class, which demonstrate the versatility of the wok as both a fryer and a steamer. The first, Chow Gai Kow, stir-fried chicken with Chinese vegetables, is unusual because the chicken must be scored, in order that it curl up upon cooking. Thus its name, "Chow Gai Kow," which means literally "stir-fried chicken balls." The second, for steamed striped bass, is unusual for its last-minute addition of boiled peanut oil as a traditional Chinese gesture of welcome and to give the cooked fish an unusually fine aroma. Boiling the oil changes its texture and aroma.

- 1/2 cup bamboo shoots, thinly sliced
- 1 1/2 cups bok choy (white portion sliced diagonally)
- 1 1/2 cups snow peas, stringed and into 1-inch pieces
- 1 1/4 cups silk squash
- 1 clove garlic, finely diced
- 1/2 cup chicken broth

1. Marinate chicken cubes over in ginger juice (dice ginger and squeeze in garlic press), white wine, sesame oil, oyster sauce, salt, sugar, pepper, egg white. Add cornstarch just before cooking.
 2. Brown water chestnuts, bamboo shoots, bok choy and snow peas in tablespoons of the peanut oil, to which ginger and salt have been added. Silk squash must be added at the moment, since it tends to become soft if left standing. This step should take no more than one minute. Remove the vegetables from the wok and serve, warmed. Wash the wok.
 3. Brown garlic in 3 remaining tablespoons peanut oil, then add chick and marinade. Spread chicken in single layer around wok and broil both sides, about 2 or 3 minutes.
 4. Add chicken broth, slowly, around the edge of the wok so it flows the chicken.
 5. Add vegetables to chicken stir-fry together for about 30 seconds. Serve hot immediately.
- Yield: 6 servings.

Yuk See Jing Far Ban

(Steamed Striped Bass)

1. 2 1/2-pound whole striped bass, intestines and extra fat removed, washed inside and out and dried well.
 2. 2 teaspoons salt
 - 2 tablespoons peanut oil
 - 2 teaspoons sesame oil
 - 2 tablespoons thin soy sauce
 - 1 tablespoon white wine
 - 4 large slices of fresh ginger, shredded
 - 1/2 pound fresh pork, finely shredded, mixed with 1/2 teaspoon of the sesame oil
 - 4 dried mushrooms, stems discarded, soaked and thinly sliced
 - 2 tablespoons boiled peanut oil
 - 3 scallions, finely diced
1. Sprinkle cavity and outside of fish with salt, peanut oil, remaining sesame oil, soy sauce, white wine and shredded ginger.
 2. Place fish in ovenproof dish.
 3. Sprinkle shredded pork in steamer and mushrooms over outside of fish.
 4. Place two sets of chopsticks, baking rack, in wok, over gas (Water should not touch chopsticks rack.)
 5. Bring water to a boil and place dish with fish on the chopsticks rack. (If fish is too large, it may be cooked in a brownstone with a half or three-quarters of an hour, until a chopstick can be easily inserted into fish.)
 6. Remove fish from wok and pour over it the two tablespoons of boiled peanut oil. (The oil may be boiled a day in advance. When oil boils, wisps of smoke can be seen.) It need not be when poured over fish.
 7. Sprinkle diced scallions over fish and serve immediately.
- Yield: 6 servings.

NEW YORK TIMES UNFAIR TO ZABAR'S

Hey, New York Times, we'd like your attention for a moment. We think you've forgotten about us. We know we're on Broadway and 80th St., and not the elegant East Side. But that shouldn't stop you from visiting us occasionally. And taking note of what we do. It doesn't stop 20,000 customers a week from coming to our store for 5,000 lbs. of coffee: a half ton of Iox; 1500 lbs. of French Brie; 200 lbs. of caviar; 300 coffee-makers (including several European models exclusive with us); plus thousands of other gourmet foods and appliances.

We'd like to set the story straight: when it comes to fine foods and cookware, we sell the finest. And our prices are lower than anyone's... certainly less than the much-reported chic department and specialty stores. If you don't believe us, we have a suggestion: a tour of our store. And a comparison of the Holiday Specials listed below.

We hope the Times keeps up its good work. After all, it's the paper with all the news that's fit to print. And we also hope the editors take just a little more notice of Zabar's. The store with all the food that's fit to feast.

Wok-Wise Living Abroad: Hong Kong

By FOX BUTTERFIELD

The wok has become one of the first cooking contraptions bought by new immigrants.

FAVORITE pastime in Hong Kong is shopping. But with the vast improvement in the standard of living that resulted from the successful industrial development of the last 10 years, along with worldwide inflation and the decline of the United States dollar, shopping is no longer the bargain that it once was.

Some local antique dealers now travel to Europe and the United States to buy Chinese porcelain or to sell it in Hong Kong at higher prices to these collectors or tourists. A tailor-made suit at one of the better shops, say, A Man Hing Cheong, former President Richard M. Nixon always wears, now starts at $180 for the least expensive. And the shop won't make them overnight for the tourists.

But for the knowledgeable, there are still some bargains. One of the most popular with Chinese and foreigners alike is the morning jade market on Canton Road in Kowloon, across the harbor from Hong Kong Island. There, in front of jewelry stores stocked with jade, other street vendors sell everything from pieces of stone, presumably containing a valued piece of jade, to intricately carved jade animals. Prices range from $5 to $50,000.

For the clothes-conscious, the best buys may be recommended that the less expensive—and in Hong Kong perfectly legal—heat be used for woks. Inexpensive, and in Hong Kong perfectly legal—two metal rings be used, one in Happy Valley, near the Hong Kong Race Course and one in the Happy Valley, near the Hong Kong Race Course.

For experimenters, a wok used as an excellent fryer, well. French fries, rolls, chicken, duck, pork, fantail shrimp, and deep-fry in a wok. For controlled better fryer or in a traditional wok.

In fact, one way to use a wok is to cook in it in right off. To use the wok as a steamer, pour three to four cups of water into it. Over the pairs of chopsticks (or a baking rack), touch the water. While the water boils, replenish whatever you are cooking.

Any vegetables are not cooked into a wok, stir-fried lightly happens with traditional vegetables such as string beans, peppers, onions, celery, carrots can achieve a fresh bok choy, silk chestnuts, snow peas, choy sum (small), Chinese broccoli and when stir-fried in a wok. And after a few minutes, you might achieve a self, perhaps progress to cook.

Another favorite activity in Hong Kong is eating, the best Chinese food in Hong Kong is seasonal, a subtle, underrated cuisine of Canton prevails and seasonal foods are snake, tiny rice birds, fresh mbou shoots, and in the cold winter months, dog. Fall, however, is the time for the most popular ison dish of all—Shanghai crab. These grayish-brown, fresh-water crabs, which in common belief me from one famous lake near Shanghai, are the star of the show.

Among connoisseurs, they are eaten only for their succulent portions of roe, or "crab coral," as the Chinese call it because of its bright reddish-orange color. At some crab-eating parties, which dominate the social calendar for wealthy residents this time of year, the guests simply toss away the crab legs, ceasing to eat the roe is savored. Preparation is simple enough. The crabs are scrubbed of their hairy surfaces, steamed 10 minutes, and then served.

Put Your Id In Your Flat. Continued from Page C1. The freedom that single people have in this city makes the task of creating a place to live more difficult. There are no practicalities to hide behind. The deeper question must be faced head-on—what do you want your house to say about you? It can communicate a sense of luxury, of casualness, of conservatism, of frugality.

It all comes down, of course, to a question of style, but saying that is not enough, for the problem of average person has is not so much acting on taste as getting in touch with it in the first place. We are not always sure of what we want—we do not always know what we prefer, and when we respond in a particular way to a particular style or design, we are often not certain enough of our own response to make us want to take a chance on getting some of it for ourselves.

As a result, many people, like the woman at Bloomingdale's, seek refuge in packages of design. As even these require a certain degree of decision, course—the Bloomingdale's customer knew she wanted a place that emphasized modern materials and shapes; someone who goes to another store and orders up a roomful of Colonial Williamsburg reproductions has obviously made certain other decisions about himself or herself that he or she is eager to communicate.

The bachelor who creates a playboy fantasy of rug, chrome and mirrors is making a statement that clearly goes well beyond these objects themselves; that sort of narcissism. That man's opposite, the unmarried man who lives in a brownstone with ratty furniture he hauled to New York from his college dormitory room, is saying more than this: his favorite furniture; he wants his house to be tied to a certain more casual, less pressured life.

In that these people are allowing their houses to express something about themselves they are at least partly on the right road. Yet the packaged nature of the swinging bachelor pad, the neo-dormitory trash pad, or other pieces of instant image make these places, at bottom, more stereotypes than anything else. They emerge from recipes, and recipes never really work in matters of design. But then, what do you do when you want to say something about yourself beyond merely proclaiming your membership in the society of swinging singles or the community of over-age college students?

In "The Place of Houses," an argument against orthodox modern architecture by three architects, Charles Moore, Gerald Allen and Donly Lyndon, the authors suggest that abstract standards of design are less important than personal choices. "Anyone who cares enough to create a house of great worth and no ornament is required. If you care enough, you just do it. You bind the goods and trappings of your life together with your dreams to make a place that is uniquely your own. In doing so you build a semblance of the world you know, adding it to the community that surrounds you."

Building a "semblance of the world you know" is the essential idea. Think hard about what interests you, and let your living space emphasize it. If you have a particular collection of objects, their display can be a crucial part of the design of a house or apartment; if music is especially important to you, let the arrangement of stereo equipment or acoustical considerations be the factors to which other design aspects are accommodated.

Art collectors have always let their hobby dominate the design of their living space, but there is no reason why china collectors, animal lovers, weavers, writers, potters or cooks cannot do the same. Julia Child has written that she does most of her entertaining in her kitchen, as well she should, since cooking is central to her life; by the same token, a living space can be built around books or music or art breeding.

Crab Roe, $5 Jade And a 25-Foot Junk

and dipped in a sauce of vinegar and chopped ginger, with a touch of sugar and sometimes soy sauce. But if you are a foreigner you are advised to be a guest rather than try to be the host. For Shanghai crab is not cheap.

In one of the several small shops that import the unprepossessing-looking crabs from Shanghai, they cost 10 to 30 Hong Kong dollars, depending on size, or about $2 to $6 in American terms. At a Shanghai restaurant, such as the well-regarded Sanno, in central Hong Kong, the price is often double that. Most Chinese can eat at least three or four crabs at a sitting, and a round Chinese table usually accommodates 10 or 12 people. So the bill for the crab alone at a restaurant can easily run to about $400 (American).

At most meals, the crab would be followed by several other dishes, though "no one serves a dozen dishes any more, that's a bore," said Kai-yin Lo, a successful jewelry designer who comes from a prominent Hong Kong family. Miss Lo said she believes the penchant for Shanghai crab reflects "one of the most significant Chinese characteristics, a love for good food, a willingness to spend lots of money on it."

"I went to one dinner party where they had all the animals of the zoo—swan, fox, bear's paw, bird's nest, dog, and civet cat," Miss Lo said. The dinner reportedly cost more than $1,000.

That party was expensive, but wedding banquets are even more elaborate. Among the Hong Kong elite, wedding banquets would have several mandatory dishes—shark's fin, abalone, sucking pig and conch, for example. They can bring the bill for a table of 10 or 12 people to $850 or more.

At the wedding of the daughter of Stanley Ho, who owns a major portion of the gambling syndicate in the small neighboring Portuguese enclave of Macao, there were said to have been 120 such tables. That would involve, say, $80,000.

And they didn't even serve the best quality abalone, remarked one guest, who asked that his name not be used. "With so many people, you can be excused."

If you are among those here susceptible to the claustrophobia that seems to overtake certain Americans accustomed to driving to Long Island or Vermont for the weekend, the prescribed remedy is a boat.

Any boat really will do, though foreigners seem to like Chinese junks, which, with their high decks and rounded shapes, suggest something of the mysterious Orient. You can buy a modest, 25-foot junk, secondhand, for $6,000 or so. For another $200 a month you will undoubtedly want to hire a boat boy, who will drive the craft for you and make sure it is stocked with beer and cold white wine for Sunday trips to one of the outlying islands. Since most Americans here already pay $1,000 to $2,000 a month for their apartments—there are virtually no private homes left in Hong Kong—the added expense of a boat may actually seem trivial.

One of the most elegant boats in Hong Kong, not surprisingly, belongs to a leader of the shipping industry, Y. K. Pao. Mr. Pao, a hard-working man who lives relatively modestly, has one small boat to take him from his home in Deepwater Bay to his office every morning, thus beating the traffic.

He also has another, a sleek 66-foot motor launch, named World Wide after his company. It is mostly used for company entertaining, an aide to Mr. Pao explained, and it has a large black, leather-padded bar and a well-dressed crew of seven for the purpose.

A living space, thus, can break from convention to emphasize aspects of its owner that are not directly connected with design at all. It should also, obviously, emphasize those parts of its owner's personality that are design-related—for example, if you love the color red, use it if you like lots of furniture or very little furniture or large things or small things, act accordingly. Look hard at houses and apartments you admire and try to learn from them, but at bottom trust your own taste; the best places invariably emerge from the special qualities of their owners, not from any rules.

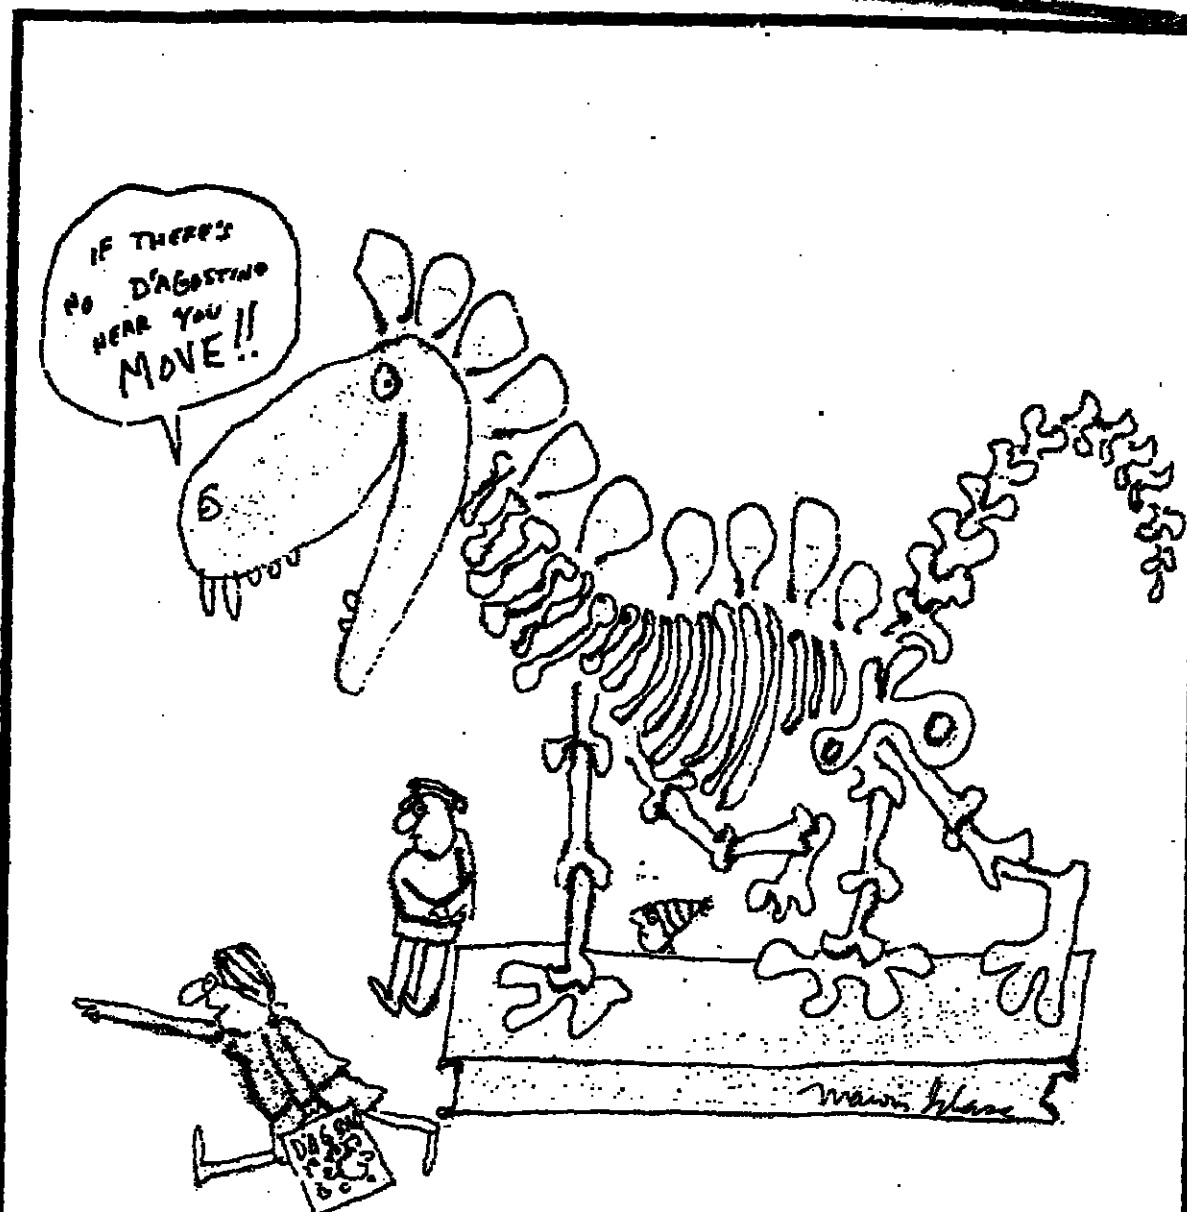

(The dictums about mixing certain periods or certain colors or avoiding certain kinds of furniture do, like rules about wine and clothes, have a certain basis in logic, but that hardly makes them written in stone.)

All of these considerations might be lumped together as internal—as ways in which your living space can reflect you. There are, of course, external considerations as well.

Once you have thought through the question of your own priorities, look hard at your living space as a physical entity. New York apartments, particularly small ones, rarely have too many unusual architectural attributes, but consider those that may exist and use them as a starting point. One woman I know has a splendid set of windows curving around the end of her living room in a conservatory-like bay; she wisely oriented the room around them.

If you have a view, exploit it by arranging furniture around the windows and, if possible, leaving them uncovered. If you have a long corridor, give it interest by turning it into a gallery; if you have high ceilings or elaborate paneling, let lighting and your choice of furniture relate to these features. Conversely, one can de-emphasize architectural elements as well—mirrors, certain uses of color, and minimal furniture can expand cramped rooms, for example.

Professional expertise is helpful, especially in technical areas such as lighting. But remember that, as a single person, one has more freedom to make a house a personal symbol than one does at any other point in life, and thus it is one's own instincts that should always be the foundation. Everyone is used to perceiving the architectural reality of a group of rooms as a given in the design of a living space; the challenge is to view your own life as an equally concrete beginning point.

Child's World

Richard Flaste

The Date Is Incidental

THE calendars produced for 1977's children are so clever that the illustrations become everything, while the days of the week are mere supernumeraries, hanging around in case anyone actually wants to know the date.

That happens with elaborate adult calendars, too, of course, but the funny thing about the calendars for youngsters is that they can be appealing to children still too young to keep track of the day after tomorrow—never mind the 15th of the month, or Shrove Tuesday.

Calendars that glow in the dark have a certain charm for preschoolers as well as for school-age children. One such calendar, published by Windmill Books and selling, as most of them do, for about $4, is called the "Night-Lite Calendar." Above each month there's a colorful picture of personified animals—rabbits, dogs, cats, monkeys—doing what children like to imagine themselves doing: skating and flying and going to the amusement park.

If the pictures are exposed to electric light for five minutes, small elements, such as the portholes of a boat or the stars in a night scene, glow for about a half-hour.

A similar calendar, with more-familiar animals, is put out by the Walt Disney people. Mickey and Pluto and all their big-eyed clan show up in settings that also have small parts that glow. (You can tell what will glow by running your fingertips over the surface; the raised elements are phosphorescent.)

A different sort of glow emanates from "Gyo Fujikawa's Calendar," published by Grosset & Dunlap. It contains the radiant Fujikawa illustrations with each leaf, each flower petal meticulously drawn in seasonal scenes that are usually peopled by children.

And then there's the Sierra Club's entry called "What the Forest Tells Me." For each month, there's a page with a high-quality glossy photo of an animal in the wild and the standard arrangement of numbers indicating days of the month.

But between those pages, there are pages crammed with information associated with each day: "June 30, Thursday, Full Moon, 10:24 P.M., E.S.T. In the first two days of its life the caterpillar of the polyphemus moth eats an amount of food equal to 86,000 times its weight at birth."

Macmillan publishes the "Calendar for Children by Ruthven Treman with Stickers & Space for Recording Stuff." It's a busy title for a busy calendar.

The stickers say things like, "Teacher is not fair" and "Stayed up until..." In addition to providing space for those stickers, the monthly calendars are surrounded by facts: "March 13, 1877, Chester Greenwood of Farmington, Maine, patented earmuffs."

And still the calendar-makers hadn't exhausted their ideas. There's a "Seas Street" calendar from Random House, one on super-heroes from Simon & Schuster, and a riddle calendar from Scribner's. Most of them are widely available in bookstores.

Ah, Those Choo-Choos

You don't need a calendar to know that Christmas is coming. Just walk past the Kodak Gallery on West 43d Street, and you'll notice that an electric train is already set up in the window as part of an exhibition on "favorite things." This, after all, is the season when a middle-aged man's fancy turns to model trains, so he buys them for his children.

The cliché about parents buying trains for themselves instead of their children is manifestly true; one salesman said with a shrug that every year parents purchase $300 sets that their children resolutely ignore. So it's a good idea to approach buying the trains with an awareness of what your child is likely to enjoy and with cautious spending, in case you're wrong (the sets can always be added to later).

The trains are classified according to size. O-gauge is about 4 inches high. HO is half that size, and N is half of HO. The people who deal in electric trains say that without question the size most appropriate for children under 9 or 10 years old is the O-gauge. The smaller ones are frustratingly too difficult to handle. The major producer of O-gauge trains is Lionel, which has a number of starter sets. A respectable beginning—three cars, locomotive, transformer and track—costs about $30.

The problem with this size is that if a child decides to get intensely involved as a hobbyist he's relatively limited in accessories that are available—those fancy villages, terrains and additional cars. Although there certainly are ways to make the sets more elaborate.

But there's much more one can do in the HO size. Many companies produce accessories for these trains. A decent starter set sells for about $35. But it's also possible to be extravagant—the Rolls-Royce of HO is said to be the line produced by the West German company Marklin, which starts at more than $100. Good, less expensive companies are Atlas and A.R.M.

Probably the most expensive to be found in Manhattan is on West 45th Street between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, where the Model Railroad Equipment Corporation and the Roundhouse sit across the street from each other.

The trains at F.A.O. Schwarz entrance this youngster

The New York Times/Stephen Silberman

Don't walk out of either train set without checking into the hobby bins. They provide such intriguing embellishments as designs for track arrangements.

That train running in the Kodak window, by the way, is made, I.G.B., another German company, although it's widely sold, its attraction is mostly that of a novelty. The set and equipment are so durable that the train is capable of running indoors-out. And it costs something near $2 to get one rolling on your patio.

More Dough for Play

A couple of weeks ago we published a recipe for "play dough." It elicited an impassioned response from Mrs. Left of New Haven, who writes: "I can't bear your publicizing only easy recipes for play dough when there is another, only a little more complicated, that makes a very much more satisfactory product. It feels nice. Here's Mrs. Left's contribution:

- 1 cup flour
 - 1/2 cup salt
 - 2 tablespoons cream of tartar
 - 1 tablespoon cooking oil
 - 1 cup water
- Mix the ingredients, then add the water, first a little at a time, then all. Cook in a pot at low heat for 15 minutes or more, stirring until it begins to dry. "It lumps terribly all of sudden," Mrs. Left says, "but do worry, keep stirring and knead it. It will smooth it out at the end when it's just cool enough to touch."
- She adds: "It's nice to let the kids do the coloring. Pour a few drops vegetable coloring and knead through. She says the dough will store 'essentially forever' in a plastic bag."

All About: Plants—To Fertilize or Not

By JOAN-LEE FAUST

WHEN the edges of a spider plant's leaves turn brown or when the geranium on the windowsill fails to bloom, the solution is fertilizer, right? Wrong.

That's just about the worst decision to make until the cause of the plant's trouble is established. Maybe the solution is to apply fertilizer, but more likely the browned edges on the spider plant are caused by irregular watering—first neglecting, then soaking the soil. The geranium may not bloom because it is already overfed.

If house-plant fertilizers are not called "emas" are they? They are nutrition for actively growing plants; they keep leaves green, encourage strong roots, form flower buds and strengthen stems.

In visits to garden centers, dime stores and supermarkets where plant supplies are sold, the impulse is to reach for the brightest label. But most important is the fine print on the label.

Fertilizers are chemical elements taken up by plant roots in solution. Soils have some nutrients, but for maximum growth, fertilizers are added. Plants potted in the soilless peat-lite mixtures (peat and vermiculite or perlite) need proper feeding, as these mixtures have no nutrients or have minimal amounts added.

Plants need 16 elements to grow properly. The three major ones—nitrogen, phosphorus and potash—are in all complete house-plant fertilizers. Others, utilized in minute quantities, include sulfur, calcium, iron and manganese. Some fertilizers contain these elements as well.

The majority of house-plant fertilizers for sale are concentrated and must be diluted in water. The dilution directions on the label should be followed carefully. Just because a little fertilizer is good for a plant, it does not follow that more is better!

Nitrogen is in the form of ammoniacal nitrogen and/or nitrate nitrogen. The phosphorus is a form of ammonium phosphate that breaks down to phosphoric acid, and the potash may be from potassium nitrate or potassium chloride.

The difference between bagged chemical fertilizers for garden-agricultural use and water-solubles used for house plants is that outdoor fertilizers depend on natural soil moisture and soil microbial action to break down to soluble salt form and become available to the plants. The house-plant chemicals are already reduced to salt form and are quickly water-soluble. This is why the products are more expensive and why results are discernible in a few days.

Every package of house-plant fertilizer will have a series of numbers written on it, such as 15-30-15. This is the formula of that fertilizer, listing the percentages of the three major elements—nitrogen, phosphorus and potash.

What do these elements do for the plants? Nitrogen is the greater supporter of photosynthetic action and growth. Phosphorus is the root-grower and helps to initiate flower buds. Fertilizers with high phosphorus content—that large middle number—are used to encourage bloom, especially for African violets and other greenhouse plants. They are also used in spring to grow good roots on seedlings. Potash, the third member, makes stems strong, promotes good flower formation and is said by some soil experts to influence disease resistance.

The bloom in indoor house plants has spawned a proliferation of gadgets, pots, accessories and remedies. C. Edward Seabird, executive vice president of the Ra-pid-gro Corporation, a pioneer company in water-solubles, observed: "Because of the enormous interest in house plants, the number of investors who are getting into the gardening market has exploded. Many of the people are opportunists, not horticulturalists, and they are getting out products with exaggerated claims.

Good house-plant fertilizers are established brands.

Fish emulsions are available under several labels including Ortho (5-2) and Stim-u-plant (5-5-1). Three general-purpose formulas are Hyponex (6-19), Ra-pid-gro (23-19-17) and Miracle-Gro (15-30-15). A number of specialties, including Swiss Farms and Plant Life, package assorted formulas for particular needs, such as acid-7-7 fertilizer for gardenias, azaleas, camellias and citrus. Peters, a soil-testing manufacturer, may formulas in large quantities. Their products are particularly popular with greenhouse owners.

The most recent innovations in the house-plant fertilizer field are the timed-release products. The fertilizer granules are encapsulated to release their contents over periods of three to six months.

A pioneer product in this line was Osmocote, manufactured by the Scott Chemical Company. This was followed by others, including the Precise-Ton by the 3M Company. Peters also has a 90-day Slow Release (14-7-7).

The timed-release fertilizers have a hazard factor for the casual plant tender-overside. Records must be kept of when and what fertilizer is used, with a note of when the product is expected to be "exhausted."

Knowing when to feed plants with fertilizer is the art of horticulture that separates the hobbyists from the green thumbs. Much depends on the growing media, the type of plants and the season of the year. Light is the most important factor.

Plants growing in southern exposures will be fed more frequently than those in shade. Plants under fluorescent lights have constant "sunshine" and need regular feeding, while those in cool winter windows may be in a semi-resting period.

If an error is to be made in feeding plants, it is to be on the side of starvation. New plants are getting occurs in only 1 or 2 percent—and certainly no more than 10 percent—of American children. (The phenomenon is clearly culturally related since some countries say it does not exist at all and others report an incidence of less than 1 percent.)

Frequently, the hyperkinetic child will have other concurrent difficulties, such as specific learning disabilities, perceptual problems and emotional disorders, which require special treatment.

In examining an overactive child, the American Academy of Pediatrics and others caution that many factors, in addition to true hyperkinesis, can cause this symptom, including the child's basic personality, anxiety, depression, inapparent seizures and the perceptions of the beholder.

To find specialists who can do the proper workup, your doctor might call the pediatrics department of the nearest medical school or university hospital, or you can write to the Association for Children with Learning Disabilities, 5225 Grace Street, Pittsburgh, Pa. 15236 (please send a stamped, self-addressed, legal-size envelope).

Hyperkinesis has been variously ascribed to such conditions as minimal brain damage, sensitivity to food additives, low blood sugar and excessive lead. In fact, the real cause is not known and it is likely that a number of different causes can produce the hyperkinetic syndrome.

Drugs, most commonly amphetamine or methylphenidate (Ritalin), are said to alleviate symptoms in about 70 percent of children with true hyperkinesis. Unlike normal people, who become restless, nervous and overactive from these stimulants, hyperkinetic children are subdued by them.

Stimulant drugs, especially amphetamine, diminish weight gain and growth and experts advise that they be discontinued two years before the child's bones stop growing to allow him to catch up. On the positive side, studies have shown that use of these drugs in treating hyperkinesis does not lead to addiction or abuse of other drugs.

However, many parents dislike the idea of giving their children a potent drug day after day and are readily attracted to seemingly safer therapies, such as the diet Dr. Feingold has devised. Dr. Feingold claims that 50 percent of hyperactive children are greatly improved by his diet, which eliminates foods and drugs with artificial colorings and flavorings and salicylates.

Two independent studies, in which neither the parents nor teachers knew which diet the child was on, showed no such dramatic effect of the Feingold diet compared with a diet containing the taboo foods. Some children improved, but others got worse. The researchers concluded that further study of the Feingold diet was warranted, but no claims could currently be made about its effectiveness.

Recently, a team at Downstate Medical Center in Brooklyn suggested on the basis of a preliminary study that perhaps half the hyperactive children had excessive amounts of lead in their bodies (as shown by elevated levels of lead in the blood and urine) and the removal of the lead with drugs called chelating agents alleviated the hyperactivity in half the cases.

The researchers were cautious about making far-reaching claims for the early findings in 13 children, but the diet that lead levels be considered in evaluating hyperactive children.

New Cosmetics Bottles—and the Same High Hopes

By ANGELA TAYLOR

A sense of coddling one's self and a boost in morale are what stop a woman at the counter with its promise of youth and beauty.

At 12:45, the Estée Lauder counter at Lord & Taylor was a scene of controlled pandemonium. Women jostled one another to brush eye shadow or blusher on their faces, to smear lipstick on their hands and to get the attention of the six white-coated young women behind the counter. Similar scenes were being carried out at other counters in the store's sparkling new cosmetics department, recently enlarged and moved up front to catch the customer's eye.

Lauder makeup, treatment creams, bubble bath and cologne changed hands. If the cash register hadn't been the silent kind, it would have sounded like a souped-up version of "Jingle Bells."

The register rang up $102.33 for a smartly dressed woman with a foreign accent. She had requested six cans of spray deodorant and had asked to see face powder compacts. She chose four.

"Let me show you something new," suggested Nadia Bohlman, a Lauder makeup artist who was in the store for the day. The new thing was an eye-shadow wand. The customer tried some on her hand. "This is fine, this I need." She took five, along with a bottle of eye makeup remover and some astringent.

"These things cost three times as much in Monaco," the shopper explained. She was buying for herself, her daughters and for gifts.

A middle-aged bank clerk waited patiently until Miss Bohlman was free to make her up. "I changed the color of my hair, and I look washed out," she said, adding, "I lost my husband and my son; I have only myself to think about." Moisturizer, foundation, under-eye stick, blusher, eyebrow pencil and lipstick totaled $50.22.

"You're never too old to improve," she said happily as she went off with her purchases.

Apparently not. Her place on the makeup stool was taken by a dignified woman in her 70's. Her problem was the appearance of brown spots on her face. Miss Bohlman covered them with an under-makeup cream and the right shade of foundation. The two items came to $25.38. The customer checked her face in the mirror and looked pleased.

"Please, me next." Now it was Bonnie Mirabel, in her 20's and planning to be married in a few days. She bought eye things and blusher, preferred not to use foundation.

At the other end of the counter, a mother and daughter each bought eye makeup, blusher and milk bath, spending $28.82 between them. A man from Israel carried off a shopping bag full of Aramis men's things totaling $95. "I will use some and sell some," he something," a cosmetics tycoon used to instruct his staff. "What you're selling is hope."

Hope, a boost in morale, a sense of coddling one's self when the outlook is grim are what stop a woman at the counter with its promise of youth and beauty.

"When I wake up feeling great and look it," says one young woman, "I don't stop at the cosmetics counter. But if I feel down, then I'm a sucker for some new makeup or perfume." Her mother would have pampered herself with a new hat; she will buy another eye shadow to add to the collection she already has.

"Oh, I already have closets full of this stuff," said a Jerseyan in a mink coat who was shopping with a friend in sable. "You could spend days here, trying on stuff. Cosmetics give you a lift. No matter how much you already have, you want more."

The woman who stops at the cosmetics counter is usually vulnerable, in an insecure mood, Ann Hays observed. She told about an overweight woman who had been trying to shop in the clothing departments and could find nothing to fit her.

"She was so depressed, she was almost in tears," Miss Hays related. "We sold her a new face, it cheered her up."

Although cosmetics prices have risen in this decade, they still seem reasonable after, say, the three-figure price tags on dresses.

"There's no price resistance here, compared to the upstairs departments," explained Carol Thomas, the cosmetics buyer. "And we're a fashion department, too. A woman who can't afford a Norell dress can have the prestige of a Norell lipstick for $7.50."

Her department, the cosmetics buyer added, is running 30 percent ahead of last year. Even the branch stores of "Competition keeps you on toes," said Miss Hays, who is a college graduate and who plans a future in the industry. "A woman can get it—it's not all men."

The competition extends not only to companies but also to other stores even to within one company in a Lauder has three areas: one for A and one for the Clinique line, and the regular Lauder line.

"We try to beat Clinique's figure it's a matter of pride," Miss Hays said.

The mixture of competition, manhood and difficult times makes a perfect climate at the Lauder co and the others in the store.

"Life isn't easy," Miss Hays said. "Women want to be good to themselves. They'll skimp on food to an eye shadow."

Lord & Taylor, without the benefit of Fifth Avenue's refurbishing, are ahead.

More women are out in the business world, Miss Thomas noted, and are more conscious of their looks: "A woman doesn't have to wear makeup in her kitchen; she does at her job."

The competition within the industry is bombarding women with advertising. Each cream and lipstick contains that magic ingredient: hope. It will make her irresistible to the man in her life or lure one if she's in a lull. People will guess her age at considerably younger, she hopes. She will get a job

Why, during these trying times, are women clamoring for a new lipstick or a bottle of cologne? Exactly because of trying times.

M.F.K. FISHER, author of The Art of Eating, says: "These recipes, as presented in this book, represent a permanent revolution in what we call gastronomy. . . . The book approaches the whole idea of simplicity with the author's complete understanding of what that means. . . . It is the best of Roy Andries de Groot's books."

DINAH SHORE exclaims: "This book is a beautiful re-evaluation of recipes with sauces and dressings natural and low in fat—as exquisitely and painstakingly devised as any of the heavily creamed and buttered sauces generally associated with gourmet cooking. The recipes are delicious, simple and totally satisfying—and the book is fun to read."

And JANE CLAPPERTON comments in Compassionate: "Recipes from the great chefs have been transformed into low-fat versions that taste as disgracefully rich as ever, but leave you free to gorge without guilt."

Ugly-Duckling Recliner: It's a Swan Now

By NORMA SKURKA

Guess what's making everybody sit up and take notice? The recliner.

That once clunky but beloved piece of furniture that swivels, rocks, reclines and sometimes offers a pop-up foot or head rest is undergoing what might be called an uplift—a design metamorphosis that is bringing it out of its ugly duckling phase and into a state that brings grace to a living room.

The styling change in the perennially popular chair, which has found its way into one in every four American homes since its invention nearly half a century ago, was the next natural step in the evolution of a mechanical device that seemed to have reached a zenith of comfort.

Part daybed, part easy chair and ottoman, the recliner sold at the rate of three and a half to four million last year. But with more than 50 separate wooden parts and more than 70 metal ones in some versions, it was an object capable of bringing sycophants and esthetes to the brink of war.

The sycophants—people fond of luxury and self-ferred tilts into two or three positions, from upright to semireclining.

In the '50's, when upright people were learning to rock 'n' roll, less-active folk were settling into a chair that could recline 'n' rock, too.

Not long afterward, the Lo-back recliner appeared. Considered a real innovation, it won an industry award when Stratolounger, the second largest manufacturer, introduced it in 1971, because both the headrest and footrest were now hidden from view. This meant the chair could have a lower profile and resemble a conventional living room easy chair. But it was still necessary to position it a couple of feet from the nearest wall, a requirement that persisted until the introduction of the wall hugging model.

In the current market, the average recliner costs about $300, but some people pay upwards of $1,000 for a stylish model.

One of the best looking recliners is the "Dream Chair," first introduced by Hans Reufeld of Germany and made by the Fine Arts International of Ontario, Canada, a company that has been licensed to manufacture designs from top European manufacturers.

Not only is the design first-rate—rivaling the best

The industry's competition also resulted in better people who pride themselves to build sales. (They are salaried as well as salaried companies, rather than "Competition keeps feet," said Miss Hays, who graduate and who plans the industry. "A woman—it's not all men.")

The competition extends even to within one company. Lauder has three areas, one and one for the Clingman, the regular Lauder line.

"We try to beat Clingman, it's a matter of pride," she said.

The mixture of workmanship and difficulty is a perfect climate at the Lauder and the others in the area.

indulgence—were often men who wanted the recliner, their favorite chair, in the living room. The esthetes were often their wives, who found the recliner an embarrassment to the decor, in part for its slunkiness and in part because the reclining back meant that such chairs could not be pushed off into a corner or anywhere else against a wall.

What Mao Tse-tung might have described as a "great recline forward" occurred about two years ago with the development of the wall-hugging model. Instead of a back that swung down, this version has a seat and attached footrest that moved forward into the room when fully extended.

Ever since that important change, evolution of the recliner has been a good deal quicker. Manufacturers bent on streamlining the recliner back, rimmed it down, scaled it down and left it today difficult to distinguish from a conventional lounge chair.

The newest models are the result of these efforts, but the evolutionary spurt is probably not yet over. Recliners show signs of becoming chairs even easier on the eyes.

The descent into the esthetic dark ages is actually somewhat ironic. The first recliner, made by a leading company that began business in Monroe, Mich., in 1928, was handsome. Made of slatted wood, it looked a lot like today's beach chairs or steamer chairs. A slight pressure on the arms was sufficient to tilt the back.

A salesman took the chair to a store in Ohio, where the buyer said, "If you put some padding on the thing, you might have something." The suggestion was heeded, and the first upholstered reclining chair appeared on the market a year later. Today that company in Monroe is the La-Z-Boy Chair Company, with annual net sales of $105 million.

Reclining chairs hit a high represented by new ones in positioning during the 1940's, when they ofnonreclining chairs—but the "Dream Chair" also has a patented mechanism that adjusts the back through a hydraulic pressure like that in automobile and airplane seats.

Covered in butter-soft suede or leather, the "Dream Chair" will retail at about $1,000 when it reaches Designers Furniture Center, 979 Third Avenue, in January. It will be sold through decorators and the separate ottoman will add $300 to the cost.

Those in search of a built-in foot support, a lower price and style that takes its cue from Europe might look at a high-back model with flaring arms, designed by Matti Halmes of Finland, who is now a member of Burris, another manufacturer of recliners. Introduced at the October Furniture Market in High Point, N.C., this chair, covered in natural pigskin, will cost $600 when it is offered for sale in January at Shelter Designs, 1193 Lexington Avenue.

Another recliner that is both sleekly designed and well-priced is carried by Workbench. Although it is not a wall-saver model (which means that it must be placed far enough into the room to allow clearance for the reclining back), the chair is small in scale so that it blends unobtrusively with other living room furniture. It has a high back, flaring arms and all-upholstered frame. Covered in rust-colored corduroy, it costs $250.

The new look in recliners has meant that families that wouldn't have opened their door to one a few years ago are now on their second and eyeing more.

Mr. and Mrs. Landis Eby exchanged recliners as Christmas presents last year. Pat Eby, an executive with Scholastic Magazine, intended to give one to her husband to use in the weekend house in southern New Jersey.

But she liked it so much when it arrived that he ended up buying her the matching Lo-back version. "My husband's son visits us a lot on weekends," Mrs. Eby said. "Now we really need three."

Caviar for Hard Times

By JUDITH WEINRAUB

Call it British pluck. Call it courage under fire. In the face of the highest unemployment in Britain since the Depression and in the shadow of the 45 percent depreciation of the pound in the last five years, a caviar bar has opened in London.

"Everyone I knew called it absolute madness, including my solicitor," said Richard Newport, the 29-year-old aristocrat who owns the restaurant in the Knightsbridge area. "But it's working. Lots of people are coming back. And on Saturdays we have to turn away as many as 60 or 70 people for lunch."

Like the various health-food bars, hamburger stands and ice-cream parlors that have altered the eating habits of the British public, the Caviar Bar is a specialty shop. It offers caviar in four different varieties—pressed, sevruga, osetra and beluga.

For a little more than $25, the initiate can sample 10 grams—just over an ounce—of all four kinds of caviar. The more conservative diner will also find lobster, sea bass, Dover sole, and assorted smoked fish on the menu.

"It's basically a fish restaurant," said Viscount Newport, but he admitted that the most popular item by far was beluga caviar. "We sell three to four times the amount of beluga as we do any other."

For those who have never tried caviar, Viscount Newport recommended caution and a classic approach. "A novice should start with very little of it, say 30 grams. After all, it is not an acquired taste either you like it or you don't. But try it in the proper way with buttered toast and a squeeze of lemon."

He also advises starting with sevruga, which is less expensive and grayer than his own personal favorite, the more golden osetra, and is smaller grained than the well-known beluga.

Viscount Newport's first experience with caviar was an unfulfilled one. "We were skiing in Austria, and I was about 9 years old," he said. "The look of it quite put me off, I absolutely refused to eat it."

These days he eats caviar quite frequently. He checks in at the Caviar Bar once a day whenever he is in London. (His family owns Weston Park, a 300-year-old stately home in northwest England that attracted 165,000 visitors last year.) He is pleased to see other diners returning too.

"There are Germans who told us friends had come home and raved about it," he said. "There is a group of Swedes who come in once a month. And there was one gentleman who came in one day for lunch, again that night for dinner, and for lunch the following day."

Viscount Newport, an energetic, mesomorphic-looking young man, has lots of other projects. He engineered the creation of two very fashionable boutiques on Fulham Road, and another dress shop called Plain Clothes, which, he says, sells elegant ethnic clothes from all over the world. He also owns a popular French restaurant called Bewicks.

The Caviar Bar is his personal favorite. When it opened last summer, gloom and doom were predicted. Money was tight. Several restaurants on the same desirable Knightsbridge spot, just down the road from Harrod's, had failed.

But the restaurant is flourishing and Viscount Newport thinks he knows why. "Style is something all too sadly lacking these days," he said. "Everything is served beautifully here. It's not elegance. Really, you just don't find that anywhere else these days."

The Caviar Bar is at Knightsbridge Green, 22 Brompton Road; telephone 589-8772.

The miracle of Château Gloria

THE MIRACLE OF CHATEAU GLORIA was the headline of the provocative article written by Robert Daley that appeared recently in the Magazine Section of the Sunday NEW YORK TIMES. We told you about the glory of the wine in our ad last Wednesday. The phones have been ringing incessantly asking for 'Chateau Gloria—Chateau Gloria.' We happily report that thanks to the generosity of Henri Martin, the vineyard proprietor, a substantial quantity is en route and we should be able to take care of demands for at least another week. The price you must pay to obtain this best value of red Bordeaux offered in this decade, is that you wait until time passes for delivery when all the wine will be in our cellars, ready to go to your home. For those who may not have read this wonderful article, we need simply give you one quote which should prove persuasive—"Glorious Gloria—the 'little' chateau that is better than most big ones; the chateau that not everyone has discovered yet; the bargain chateau. The price is a miracle—and, of course, it can't last. The wine is too good."

MEDAILLE D'OR-PARIS

GOLD MEDALS are not awarded lightly at the annual Paris Wine Fair. One is granted for each category. This outstanding PINOT-CHARDONNAY, LES CHARMES 1975, which adorns the cover of Craig Claiborne's wonderful new book 'Craig Claiborne Favorites Vol. II,' achieves this high honor for its clear, dryness, grace, and distinguished bouquet. It is grown in the superior soil of the wine commune of Luny, Mâcon and estate-bottled at the property. We often patronize the better French restaurants of New York and are hard put to find one that does not feature this wine—added evidence of its distinguished and enthusiastic acceptance among wine drinkers. The price is much lower than you would suspect—it is on sale only $2.99 the bottle, $34.75 the case.

Wine history will be made next Monday, December 6th. This marks the day the BEAULIOIS PRIMEUR 1976 (Pinot) will reach our cellars. The 1976 Primeur Nocturne is the best produced since the memorable 1961 vintage. As The New York Times has pointed out in a recent article, the Primeur of 1976 received much of nature's sunshine that there was no necessity to add sugar to the wine—the first time this has happened in Beaujolais since 1961. We will not be receiving many cases—much less than wine-lovers' demand for the two months old product of the wine. Should you want any for your own personal pleasure, or as the most unique of wine gifts—please order promptly. The price for such an engaging charm, fruit, richness of taste, is modest. The cost is only $3.99 the bottle, $44.50 the case.

There are traditionalists who do not take a fancy to Beaujolais Primeur but prefer the more familiar Beaujolais that enjoys longer barrel age. For those classic wine-drinkers, we proudly offer the BROLLU, CHATEAU DE LA CHAIZE 1975, estate-bottled by Marquis de Roussy de Sales. It is this Brollu 1975 that achieved a unique award, for the first time in wine history, this 1975 won the Gold Medal awards consecutively at the Mâcon Fair, Paris Fair and Brussels Fair. In this more exalted atmosphere of Beaujolais, we fear we will not have enough to last through Christmas. So here again we urge prompt ordering. Available at $3.99 the bottle, $44.50 the case.

POMMERY & GRENO BRUT

AT $8.99 THE BOTTLE! UNBELIEVABLE, BUT TRUE!

We quote Frank Schoonmaker's 'Encyclopedia of Wine,' "Most major Champagne houses are also large vineyard owners and the extent of their vineyard holdings is, in some degree, one indication of quality. The two largest owners of Champagne vineyards are Moët & Chandon and Pommery & Greno."

We are also aware that the proprietor of Pommery & Greno is the prestigious Prince de Polignac. It was Pommery & Greno that was chosen to celebrate the wedding of Prince Rainier and Grace Kelly in Monaco. It is the Champagne of royal families, world-famous for dryness, beautiful harmony of fruit and acidity—it is a Champagne that will meet the standards of the most demanding tastes. Like other famed Champagnes, it is a good value at $12.45 the bottle. During this holiday period, we offer you the famed Pommery & Greno Brut at only $8.99 the bottle, $97.09 the case.

Since only about 1,000 cases exist in America, we urge early acquisition.

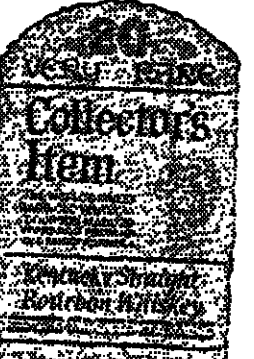

The MOST REMARKABLE and OLDEST BOURBON Produced During this Generation!

WE ARE CONDUCTING AN EXPERIMENT THIS CHRISTMAS. Usually with the coffee we serve old Cognac. This year, following an old American tradition, we shall be serving the most remarkable Bourbon that Kentucky has produced—the COLLECTOR'S ITEM 20 YEAR OLD.

Why?

We recall serving Bourbon, the greatest of America's whiskies, at the famed Institutional Investors Jeffersonian Dinner held in the Grand Ballroom of the Savoy Hotel in London. The guest speakers were the effervescent George Lang, the wine expert Hugh Johnson, and our energetic associate, Sam Aaron. There were 600 people present and they were the financial leaders of all the countries on the European continent. They were amazed when they tasted Collector's Item 20 Year Old on that occasion, and almost unanimously remarked about how it rivaled so beautifully the best of Cognac and Armagnac. Essentially, we are dealing with one of the world's greatest and most noble distillates.

A word of caution. We do not have many cases left and they will soon be gone. It will be a fond memory by January.

Private Lives | John Leonard

HE IS 10 years old. She has just asked: "What do you want for Christmas?" What you want for Christmas, of course, is that she remain 10 years old, forever, with her skin the color of clean sand and her fierce will—the flicking of the blue vein at her temple as though the brain were an alarm clock; her avidity and her perfect assurance that the people in the next room, the tall strangers, will find her of compelling interest; her sense of justice and the way she opens cans of soup. Or, if she insists on growing up, you want her to be a marine biologist or President of the United States.

"Why don't you make me something?" is your reply. This is received with a sigh the size of Ken Russell's affront. "Damn it," she says. (Your daughter isn't perfect: she talks on a occasion like a gutter-snipe and watches reruns of "Gilligan's Island.") It seems that she has saved up $23, and yet her mother, her grandmother, her grandfather and her uncle all want her to make something for them. "Why can't we have an old-fashioned Christmas where you buy things?"

Fathers specialize in not being able to answer the important questions. And you are especially ill equipped to explain the metaphysics of gift-giving, the erotics of buying, the politics of consumption. You have always found the exchange of gifts to be somehow sinister, a bartering of psychic yardsticks and symbolic energies. You don't think of yourself as a consumer, except of alcohol: in a nation of mouths, you are an ear or a thumb. Department stores remind you of prison camps and orthopedic gym.

Why is this? The anxiety at Christmas and birthdays, those orgies of disappointment, of boxes disemboweled, of wrapping paper like bandages pulled off emotions? Why, ever since you were your daughter's age and got a Kodak Brownie camera, haven't you been happy on Dec. 27? It's not that you're some lofty anchorite, a soul beyond the veil of Maya, a time whistled at midnight in a Himalayan comfort-station. The rooms of your life are upholstered. You have chosen thousands of books. You brood in an Eames chair. You are surrounded by what a French existentialist called "objects opaque in their servitude." You dream of an ice-cube machine. You will end with a Pacemaker.

Of the various holidays about which one is supposed to be enthusiastic, you most approve Thanksgiving. Gifts aren't involved. Food disappears. There is so much food, as a matter of fact, that it isn't necessary to eat; no one is watching but the pumpkin pie. Poems or prayers are composed with ball-point drumsticks. Friends lie down on a bed of stuffing. If the children are bored, they can watch football or make Christmas presents.

You approve, too, of your friends. They sat there last Thursday like history taking the afternoon off, variously heroic in their marriages and work, made longer by their stretch on the water-wheel of time, desiring to please. You noticed that they drank less and smoked less than New Yorkers used to. You observed that your son had formed his first crush on a member of the opposite sex, and his taste impressed you. You listened to conversation about the strategy of the bite in vampire movies. You thought to ask about the psychology of gifts, the ambiguity of purchase, the trauma of receivership, the suction of reciprocity. Your friends are hard to interrupt, but appreciate you as a consumer of other people's ideas.

And it was the idea of giving that they plucked and strummed, like a turkey or a hang-up. A gift, after all, is somebody else's idea of who you are, a guess. You may not know what you want or need, that may be your problem. "Moyz," with one drop of thy blood, my drye soull! Donne asked Christ—and he surprised when you get it. You may be appalled to learn, from their gifts, what other people think of you: Have they so radically misperceived? Have I so deliberately misrepresented? Do they know me so little, or too well? Can I abide their estimate? And do you, on giving, dare to define your feelings for another, the limits of your apprehension?

On hearing all this, you had mixed emotions. Inside every gift-box is an intimacy and a time-bomb, a presumption and a curse. You give, most of the time, books and long-playing records, stating your spiritual whereabouts when doing so, assuming the recipient is in the vicinity. What if she lives in another country? What if your gift is an advertisement for yourself? What if, not knowing what you want—besides an ice-cube machine—you are incapable of imagining what she wants, and end up insulting her by choosing the plastic, the campy or the obscene?

Moreover, you have learned from your friends that among them are artists in gift-giving, haunters of shops, mood-detectives who have lavished such stamina and enterprise on a present for you that their love astounds. You expect to open up a secret of your character; inside, instead, you discover grace. Surprise! Not an ambush, but a valentine or a credit card. And so you take your daughter aside. She probably wants a chemistry set or bionic kneecaps. You are a medicament, asking for aims of another order.

"What do I want for Christmas? I want you to listen to Beethoven's last quartets instead of The Grateful Dead. I want Bobby Kennedy to be alive. I want to be Russell Baker or Leo Tolstoy, whichever comes first. I want to go to Mars. I want to be your father."

New Yorkers, etc. | John Corry

ALEXANDER H. COHEN gave a party the other night. Mr. Cohen does not need much provocation to give a party, and when it is the opening night of a play he has just produced he does not need any provocation at all. In this case, the play was "Comedians," and toward the end of the party the Pinkerton man at the door said he had counted 397 people who had come to celebrate. "I really don't know why we have parties," Mr. Cohen said thoughtfully then. "The reviews will be the same whether we have a party or not."

Mr. Cohen may only have been feeling peevish when he said that. A party on opening night is a ritual. Opening night is a ritual, too. Neither the opening nights nor the parties are what they once were, but opening nights on Broadway, unless the play that opens is a turkey, still have élan. "Comedians" was hardly a turkey; therefore, its opening at the Music Box Theater had élan.

"Why is David Susskind spending his time scanning the audience?" a woman in Row H wondered aloud before the curtain went up. Mr. Susskind, a few rows in front of her, was indeed scanning. Other people, in turn, were scanning him back. Mr. Cohen, meanwhile, was standing in the back of the theater, scanning everyone. Some producers hide in a bathroom on opening nights and throw up. Mr. Cohen has been around too long for that.

Outside the Music Box, autograph collectors were circling. They always do on opening nights, and among themselves they discuss celebrities as earnestly as other people discuss their own families. Their doyen, a ruffled man of about 50, slips into theaters during intermissions and gets in everyone's way. "Candy Bergen," he was saying, outside the Music Box. "I saw Candy Bergen go in, but I don't know the guy she was with."

Clearly the doyen was bothered. A woman in Row H, not the one who was watching Mr. Susskind, was bothered, too. "I thought Candy was going to come with Gary Trudeau," she said. "I don't know that man she's with." The woman in Row H was enjoying herself, of course. Producers and press agents always seat the People Who Know One Another in the same part of the theater, usually up front. At the Music Box, Joe Papp was sitting in the same row as Miss Bergen, not far from Martin Gabel and Arlene Francis, a short way from Bess Myerson and Representative Edward Koch, a row in back of Sybil Burton and Jordan Christopher, who were near Jean March, who was in front of Julie Styne. The critics, as always, were on the aisles. Opening night are family affairs.

When the curtain fell at the end of act one, there was loud applause. Applause is almost always louder on opening nights. For one thing, the play's backers are in the audience. For another thing, the en famille feeling is intense. Only the critics sit in silence.

At the intermission, Mr. Papp stood near a doorway, looking intense. Mr. Cohen stayed in the back of the theater, looking desperate. Desperation is the look that producers normally wear, even when their play is going well. Mr. Cohen knew his play was going well, but he looked desperate, anyway. Theater people—other producers, theater owners, here and there an actor or actress—would pass Mr. Cohen and nod or smile. Sometimes they would shake his hand. If you do not like a play on opening night, you do not tell the lobby. Very quietly, you whisper it to a friend in the lobby.

At the final curtain of "Comedians," all of Mr. Cohen's friends walked over to the United States Steakhouse Company at 51st Street and Sixth Avenue. Opening-night parties are held in Sardi's more often than anywhere else, but in the last year the Steakhouse Company has been getting opening-night parties, too. It is a big restaurant with a long bar, and a labyrinth of passageways around the tables. The thing to do there at a party is to run to the bar, get a drink, then a plate of food, and then find a table. Otherwise, the tables will be taken and you will wander around disconsolately.

At the party, someone asked Miss Bergen why she had come.

"I can't possibly comment. That's a politically charged question," she said. She was sitting at a table with the man she had gone with to the theater.

"I know him. His name is Jim Trees. I think he's a stockbroker," a woman at the next table said. "Where's Gary Trudeau?" someone else asked.

"I don't know, but there's Mike Nichols," her companion said. Mr. Nichols, who by everyone's reckoning had directed "Comedians" with uncommon brilliance, looked sad. "I love opening night parties," he said, and looked even sadder. He said he had a cough, and from his lungs there came a great, dry rasp.

"See," he said, and for the first time he smiled.

Then Earl Wilson, the Broadway columnist, wandered by. Mr. Wilson, who habitually goes to bed at 4 or 5 A.M., had flown in from Monte Carlo that night, dropped his luggage off at his apartment, and then gone on to the party. Frequently he attends parties with his wife, his secretary and an assistant. This time, Mr. Wilson's wife had stayed home.

"No doubt about it," Mr. Wilson said, "the greatest Broadway columnist I ever knew was Winchell. He had the excitement and the ambition. He was dynamic, hostile, belligerent. He was great."

Then Mr. Wilson began talking to Mr. Cohen. Mr. Cohen said that in the first 30 minutes of his "Hetzpoppin'" would be televised when it opened on Feb. 13. Gravelly, Mr. Wilson took notes. "I used to do black tie parties all the time—very formal, with place cards," Mr. Cohen said afterwards. "Tonight I saw people in the theater with sweaters. Ten years ago I would have refunded their price of admission and asked them to leave."

Mr. Cohen sighed, but he did not look defeated. He said the party for "Hetzpoppin'" would be a smash.

Owning a Rolls For an Evening...

A white Rolls-Royce glides down the street, leaving a trail of gawking pedestrians in its wake and putting all other cars to shame. In the spacious rear seat, passengers sip champagne and nibble caviar, chopped eggs and sour cream on pumpernickel while their uniformed chauffeur guides the practically noiseless machine through midtown traffic.

For most this experience is a distant fantasy or a pastime reserved for the idle rich, but for a small number of ordinary New Yorkers it has become a reality. An office-equipment salesman trying to make a sale, a young man attempting to impress his date, a middle-aged man greeting his wife at the airport after their first separation in 25 years—all added a few hours of elegance to their lives by renting Rolls-Royces.

"It was the most fun and memorable evening of our lives," said Sandra Chorn, a 28-year-old editor at Hawthorn Books, who rented a Silver Wraith for an evening as a surprise birthday present for her husband, Harry.

The Chornes and another couple were driven to a drive-in movie in Little Ferry, N. J., where Rolls-Royces are not common. They were served corned beef sandwiches and champagne while they watched "Young Frankenstein."

"No one watched the movie," Mrs. Chorn said. "They all watched us. It was over a year ago and we still talk about it."

There are a handful of little-known limousine services in the city where Rolls-Royces can be rented for about $35 to $40 an hour. Most services require a minimum of three hours. Mrs. Chorn rented a car from Elliot Cooper, who has one of the most imaginative limousine services in town. Mr. Cooper keeps his six Rolls-Royces at a garage at 137 Perry Street.

Mr. Cooper's cars include a 1929 Doctor's Coupe, an antique convertible with a rumble seat; a 1954 Silver Wraith complete with a bar, crystal decanters and a stereo tape deck; three Silver Clouds, two of them white and one blue and silver; and a Long Wheel-Base Bentley, which is black over sand in color and one of 35 in the world.

While other limousine services provide glamorous transportation to and from weddings, theater openings or diplomatic affairs, Mr. Cooper delights in fulfilling his clients' fantasies. His jobs have ranged from the relatively mild caviar and champagne for four to picking up Miss All-Bare America at Sardi's restaurant.

Not all Mr. Cooper's clients are pleasure-seekers. Once a detective posing as an art agent rented a Rolls-Royce to be able to mingle with the jet set in which he was trying to track down an art forger.

More frequently, however, his customers want a magical night on the town, and Mr. Cooper arranges everything from dinner to theater tickets to a drive-through Central Park. "We really try to accommodate ourselves to people's fantasies," he said.

Michael Peaco spent about $150 for an evening of party-hopping in a Bentley, although he didn't have much money at the time. The evening was a surprise birthday present for his girlfriend. "You only live once," said Mr. Peaco, who is the manager at a McDonald's restaurant. "You sit back and wonder what it would be like to be in a Rolls, but you'll never know until you try. So one day, you ride around in style. We all have our little fantasies."

The Rolls-Royce itself heightens people's self-esteem, according to Mr. Cooper.

"The Rolls stands for accomplishment," he said. "The owner has made it; he's foiled all the world's obstacles and come out on top. The whole world changes when you're in a Rolls." To illustrate his point, Mr. Cooper recalled a customer who was an office-equipment salesman without an office. The salesman arranged for his client to be picked up in a Rolls-Royce; he served him wine and cheese while they were driven through Central Park.

"The guy was so impressed that he signed a $30,000 contract right then in the car," Mr. Cooper said. For some clients it is enough simply to be in a Rolls-Royce. "One man just had the chauffeur sit for six hours in Central Park," Mr. Cooper said.

K. T. Magley, a 35-year-old freelance writer, was nearly broke when she rented a white Silver Cloud from Mr. Cooper two years ago.

Her unemployment checks had just run out and she had only $300 in the bank. The trip in the Rolls-Royce cost her $75.

"I was just turning 31, a crucial age," she said. "I decided never to have a party again."

Miniskirts— Surprise, Surprise

By BERNADINE MORRIS

Kenzo's miniskirts are turning up in New York, but even the women who wear them don't think they're going to take over the fashion scene.

"Who needs the aggravation?" asks Dawn Willis, who works in the accounting department of Penthouse Magazine, speaking of the attention that miniskirts attract from the men in the street. "There's a thin line today," she went on in a serious tone, "between wearing minis and being a hooker."

"I wear them because it's a great new look for me," said Abbi Schifrin, an illustrator at Graphic Workshop who is 19 years old. "The last time I wore minis I was a little kid," she said.

She has two Kenzo minis, both knitted styles that she pulls up and blouses over a belt. Her father paid for the first, a gray burdennock that cost $24 at Bloomingdale's. She likes to wear it with red tights.

When the styles were marked down last week to $24.90, she bought another in cerise and found tights to match at Fiorucci.

Kenzo is Miss Schifrin's favorite "because I love his use of color, the way he mixes colors and patterns—his old stuff and his new things go really well together."

Both women admit to being fashion nuts since they were in junior high school.

"People always get violent about the way I dress—they take it as a personal threat," said Miss Willis, who is 28.

She modeled a bit when she was 16, went to art school and left it a few years later to go to Europe.

"I figured, what could I paint if I never went anywhere?" she said.

In Paris and London, where she worked for a time, her distinctive way of dressing never caused the commotion it seems to stir in this country.

Miss Willis lives with her parents in Fort Washington, L. I., where, she says, she has "millions of scrapbooks" filled with fashions she likes and "five shelves of foreign fashion magazines."

She doesn't think minis will take over because "American women are too into pants." She wears pants once a week, when she goes to art school—in jeans.

For Miss Schifrin, who wore her mother's clothes when she went out to seek a job, patched jeans "with a $100 silk shirt" are a way of life. She likes to mix things up, like throwing a long raccoon coat over a Kenzo mini. She too lives with her parents, in Hewlett Harbor, L. I.

In high school, where she favored antique clothes and tried to look like Mick Jagger, she was, she says, "the first person to cut my hair."

Now Miss Schifrin favors such French designers as Emmanuelle Khanh and Dorothee Bis as well as Kenzo, and wears their clothes with bizarre boots or antique pants. She dresses to please herself and doesn't mind if she's noticed. She would love to design her own clothes.

Today's minis are bigger and blousier than the ones around the last time, she points out. She wears them "because they're new for me" and they're attracting as much attention as her antique dresses did in high school.

Because of the reaction she's getting, Miss Schifrin doesn't think they're for everyone, but she doesn't mind if they catch on. By that time, she'll be onto something else.

another fantasy that I couldn't live out. More than anything in the world I wanted to surprise a friend at the airport in a Silver Cloud. At that particular moment, the car was my every dream. It was the way I wanted to live."

Dispensing pleasure in the form of a Rolls-Royce is not all fun and games. Insurance for one of Mr. Cooper's cars runs to about $2,000 a year. Repair costs are about 10 times as high as those for standard cars. A dented fender might cost as much as $700 to repair and an ashtray costs $70. Mr. Cooper had to pay $350 to replace a stolen "winged lady," the hood ornament of every Rolls-Royce.

Although a Rolls-Royce is expensive to rent, Mr. Cooper says his customers run the gamut from very rich to quite poor. The wealthy prefer renting Rolls-Royces to owning one because they don't like to bother with the upkeep, according to Mr. Cooper.

His poorer clients simply prefer to pay to reality. "They may not eat for a week but they don't care," Mr. Cooper said. "People will pay their last dollar to change their lives for a day."

Theater: 'Herzl' Salutes Zionist

By CLIVE BARNES

Leader of His Tribe

THE STORY of Theodor Herzl, the father of Zionism, is one of the most inspiring of its time. Here was a man fighting against incredible opposition to create a Jewish state. A play on this remarkable man opened at the Palace Theater last night. Called simply "Herzl," it is by Dore Schary and Amos Elon, and is based on the latter's splendid and moving biography of this modern Moses.

cause, and secondly, simply to declare the existence of the State of Israel, did he make headway. From his book, "Der Judenstaat," published in 1896, and this First Congress the following year, there arose the irresistible desire and demands for Jews all over the world to have their own homeland.

ent programs under the direction of a total of 100 conductors for a total of 100 of such a schedule. The greater than for other, comparatively dozen or more, a couple of dozen might conceivably find and there to relax. But the soloists in part, sore lips and other ailments from overwork.

A recent article in the magazine, reported some of the chakra players are a study of union members between 1959 and 1967, in the coronary heart disease rate slightly higher than among other unions. The average life expectancy was only 54 years compared to the general union population. This reduced longevity is partially related to the strain of playing instruments.

In other words, instrumentalists are carrying a warning tag to your health. Violinists are susceptible to heart disease, and pianists build up such pressures during long hours that they become dizzy or fainting spells. The medical literature is extensive and well-known among musicians and players themselves, and as a Philharmonic conductor put it to this writer, "the big, bad New York music that we hear about the result of this strain is angry at each other, at each other, and 99 percent of what goes wrong because of the overwork."

The Philharmonic is not yet an everyday menace, but 200 concerts a year (not recording sessions of course) is a heavy load for any orchestra and their children, concerts in the domestic touring life is becoming a particular problem. As a particular problem, it grows worse. Symphonies in larger orchestras. Union naturally into a contract that requires that the number of either physically or musically hours in a week must not exceed a certain figure over a season. A fairly typical season (20, not including recording on a recent Thursday for the Philharmonic; 20 for the Cleveland Orchestra; 17 1/2 for the Chicago Symphony, and so on). Some of the following Saturday give the players invariable off. Vacations of seven or eight weeks are now standard. Enforcement in string sections also has been strict in a few places, including the Philharmonic, which tends to distribute the work load and extra pay evenly. Several orchestras, the harmonic among them, now grant sabbatical leaves without pay, and one, St. Louis Symphony, has agreed that a Cleveland Orchestra violinist, "the accountant's mentality" is something less evident in the offices if not the board rooms of the better orchestras. This is the opinion of an efficiency expert thinking that it logical that if a musician is paid for year-round employment, office manager ought to be able to do to the orchestra's place of business at any time and find every musician busy at his desk.

Lincoln Center" broadcast. Cameramen trundled about backstage, poking noses through holes while the music was in progress, and other cameramen in the hall passed back and forth in the simulation of actual broadcasting. The result: the concert had all the intimacy and intimacy of Monday Night Football, though without the wit and humor of Howard Cosell. Perhaps the broadcast will eventually be brought in the symphonic commentary. Why show-business atmosphere, when the music is so good and the mechanical perfection that overwork breeds in any orchestra can make a routine incident out of the most promising event, even the most promising, ultimately, television in the concert not starving. The New Chicago Symphony contract will bring the players to a $500 weekly minimum in three years, or $27,000 a year. The Philharmonic minimum is $10 less, but many players in every orchestra are paid considerably more than the minimum. Some soloists earn twice the minimum or more.

What is needed now, however, is the involvement of formulas that would let the listener benefit from these economic gains. What good does it do to have an orchestra playing 52 weeks a year if the concert is insufficiently rehearsed and indifferently played? What good does it do to have gifted soloists in every first chair if they have hernias, sore lips and sore heads?

Eventually, it would seem, American orchestras may have to go to some form of the European system. The Berlin Philharmonic has 125 musicians under contract, compared with the Philharmonic's 105. The Berlin has 20 first violinists, but never more than 16 play at any concert. Instead of a principal in each wood section, there are two principals. No American orchestra at the moment could afford such a thoroughgoing double-chair system.

The Vienna Philharmonic is another oversized orchestra, numbering some 200 players, who spend most of their time in the pit of the Vienna State Opera. The Vienna Philharmonic itself plays only 10 symphonic programs a season, in addition to 10 so-called dress rehearsals that are really concerts in all but name. Overwork is not much of a problem in Vienna.

As an American opera administrator put it during the recent New York City Opera strike: "The first horn player of the Vienna Philharmonic wouldn't think of playing all the way through 'Götterdämmerung.' He plays the first act, then another first horn takes his place."

Barring the probability of massive governmental subsidies for American orchestras, it is difficult to see the situation changing dramatically in the near future, even for the symphony stars. Players will continue to regard orchestral work as an irksome, nerve-racking way to earn a fairly good living, and they will attend symphony concerts in hopes of being moved by music will find them increasingly unsatisfying.

The power that dedicated symphony orchestras playing under great conductors once held over audiences will, if they are remembered only by the oldest citizens. Symphonic music will slide toward its destiny and become one more disposable consumer product. In fact, it now resembles a couple of artistic exceptions (name your own candidates, if you have any), that time could already be behind.

The instruments were heard in a wider variety of works that ranged from the erudite measures of Carter's Sonata for Flute, Oboe and Harpsichord to the unfettered improvisations of rockers on the banjo and guitar. 'Sunshine Boys' May Be TV Series

"The Sunshine Boys," Neil Simon's stage play that became a hit movie—in which George Burns won an Academy Award as the best supporting actor in 1975—is being developed as a possible NBC television-comedy series.

Red Buttons and Lionel Stander, whose gravelly voice was heard on the Jack Benny and Fred Allen radio shows, will play the feuding yankavillians in a one-hour television play written by Mr. Simon as a pilot for the series. Robert Moore will direct.

New York will be the location for the exterior filming and the M-G-M studios at Culver City, Calif., will be used for interior scenes. The executive producer will be Michael Levee, Sam Denoff serving as the producer.

The New York Times

'Tis the season to be civilized.

There's something warm about December in New York that brings out the humanity and the joy of living in just about all of us. It's the season for reaching out to one another and for doing a lot of the things we've always promised ourselves.

So what better time to take an evening or two—or give an evening or two—of civilized magic at The Met as part of your Christmas spirit.

The season's first performance of Tosca—conducted by Nello Santi and featuring Grace Bumbry, Giuseppe Giacomini, Sherrill Milnes and Renato Capecchi—is on December 18 and it's non-subscription.

The first Lucia di Lammermoor of the season will be conducted by Richard Woodach—with Beverly Sills, John Alexander, Ryan Edwards and John Macurdy—on Christmas Eve.

The Christmas Day matinee is the last performance of our memorable Aida production—sung by Martina Arroyo, Tatiana Troyanos, James McCracken, Louis Quilico, Jerome Hines and Philip Booth, with Kazimierz Kord conducting. And happily, it's a non-subscription performance with tickets available at almost all prices.

Tosca will be the evening performance on Christmas Day. The magnificent New Year's Eve Gala will be the same cast as above in Lucia—with all the festivity of a Met gala and all the ticket availability of a non-subscription performance.

On New Year's Day there will be an evening performance when Georges Métré conducts and Johanna Meier, Judith Forst, Stuart Burrows, Lenus Carison and Ronaldo Giaiotti give the devil his due in Faust.

The fact is, we have tickets for performances throughout the 1976-77 Season for you to enjoy—or to give.

Come to The Met Box Office any day from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. or any Sunday from Noon to 6 P.M. Or, if you prefer, simply call 580-9830 and reserve your tickets with any major credit card any day but Sunday.

It's the 1976-77 Season at The Metropolitan Opera. And we send you and yours our very warmest Greetings of the Season.

TV: Passel of Comedy

By JOHN J. O'CONNOR

THE MUSICAL-VARIETY special has grown noticeably tired in recent years, but occasionally an hour comes along to revitalize the format for at least another season. CBS has that kind of hour at 10 o'clock this evening. Starring an 80-year-old master of every trick in show business, it is called "The George Burns Special."

The most things of lasting value, Mr. Burns has improved with age. He has reached that level of public performance in which a genius for timing is intertwined with a dazzling economy of means. He hardly moves, even when he's dancing. Using his cigar as a familiar prop, he chats away amiably and manages to make every word and gesture count toward a comic end.

This is Mr. Burns' first television special since 1959. "I must have made the trace of a smile with a puff on his cigar. In the course of the program, Mr. Burns searches for a good opening number. It's important to have a great opening and a great finish, he explains, then people forget the dull stuff in between. With the help of Walter Matthau, the Osmond Brothers—"You know, I'm older than all of those Osmonds put together"—Johnny Carson, Madeline Kahn and Chita Rivera, the show doesn't have to cope with any dull stuff in between. Mr. Burns has given himself a great special.

Over on NBC, three new situation comedies are being rushed into the Wednesday evening schedule. "CPO Sharkey" at 8, "The McLean Stevenson Show" at 8:30 and "Sirota's Court" at 9. The relatively venerable "The Practice," starring Danny Thomas, will take over the 9:30 slot. The result is a mixture peculiar to the sit-com form. Some of the material is questionable, much silly, and all is instantly forgettable. "CPO Sharkey" is a chief petty officer at the Navy Training Center in San Diego. He is a bachelor veteran of 24 years service. The sit-com gimmick is that Sharkey is played by Don Rickles, the insult comedian who has spent years searching on all three networks for an acceptable television person. Sharkey could be his man. The character is a combination of loud barking and heart of gold sentimentality. Sharkey longs for the good old days of discipline and spartan living. Today's Navy is more like a Caribbean cruise, he says. "The only thing missing is shuffleboard, rumba lessons and Tony Martin." Mr. Rickles does his famous slow burns and tasteless mimicking. Staring in disbelief, he overflows with stunning logic. Hearing that a trainee has vomited on the field, he quickly traces the cause to women being in the Navy. "This kid sees her," he reasons, "thinks she's his mother and throws up." A fondness for the special brand of Rickles lunacy is obviously required. I happen to have it. "The McLean Stevenson Show" is something like the old "Dick Van Dyke Show" brought up to permissive data. Mr. Stevenson is Mac Ferguson, owner of a hardware store, wife, a divorced daughter with two children, a son who keeps girlfriends in the house basement overnight and, in the manner of "Phyllis," an elderly mother-in-law given to incessant wisecracks. On the premiere show Mac catches a young burglar, whose unsuspecting pregnant wife is waiting outside in a van. Every-one winds up the best of friends, and Mrs. Ferguson even gives the young couple money from a secret cache in the freezer. She tells Mac, "I put away $5 every time you [pause] you know." The laugh track goes into uncontrollable giggling.

"Sirota's Court" is by far the most startling of the three in overall concept. Its source of comic inspiration is nothing less than "the rising tide of crime." Matthew Sirota, played by Michael Constantine, is a tough but fair judge in a night court crammed with a typical assortment of urban types, from mild eccentrics to outright misfits.

All of this would be completely objectionable if the program weren't so outrageously funny. Everyone is a target, and the writers—in tonight's case, it's Jack Winter—score nicely. The young black pimp does his black-man-as-victim song-and-dance to unrelieved skepticism. "I don't care how many rais you've slept with," his lawyer explains, "it has no bearing on this case." The Irish-American Assistant District Attorney is a monument of dumb ego. "I'm interested in more than money and respect," he confesses to a reporter, "I want to be feared." Out of the "Barney Miller" school of urban survival, "Sirota's Court" is sociologically upsetting, and, perhaps unfortunately, very funny. Mr. Constantine is supported quite ably by Cynthia Harris, Kathleen Miller and Fred Willard.

Jamais de la vie.
Yes, food was scarce; my father had long ceased to be a greengrocer and was now an innkeeper. And, strong drink hardly suggests a diet for a growing boy. My mother's cooking evidently lacked the spirit of adventure, but she fed us regularly on whatever cheap victuals were going. Was it monotonous? It didn't seem so to me; I knew of no variations on the routine.

Anyway, I had a habit that my parents tried to scotch, only to find that it turned out to be not only unsober, but incurable: I read through meals. I read through boiled eggs, raw tomatoes, fish-and-chips, cold veal-and-ham pie (my favorite to this day), bacon, mashed turnips, rice pudding, times salmon, times peaches, and slices of bread with margarine.

The only object I would slide gently to the side of my plate, without even looking up from "Ivanhoe," was a nauseous wartime leather-bound mess called black pudding.

And on special occasions—birthdays, Christmas, Easter—my mother would produce, from a shallow saucepan, tiny jagged panes of rough brown glass seemingly retrieved from some smashed doll's house. You put them in your mouth and they tasted as good as ambrosia. Better. Homemade toffee.

When, after four interminable first years in the theater, I started to MAKE GOOD, and could occasionally afford to sit back in London's Savoy Grill scanning those misspelled menus, did I drool over smoked salmon? No. I did sample it, then felt it would sound Boishie if I confessed to my companions that I much preferred (and still do) the tinned variety.

more firmly I still shake my head. Literally, I lack taste.

No, in any restaurant, my progress through the menu is a series of cover-ups for the phillistine nongourmet that I am, by birth. I always inquire—with raised epicurean eyebrows—after the Goujons of Sole, as if they were a distinguished family of my acquaintance. "How are the Goujons tonight?" The reason is that to me, the Goujons, accompanied by Pommes de Terre, are fish-and-chips elevated to the aristocracy.

And I request Crème Caramel without informing the waiter that it reminds me of something—Homemade toffee.

Having no palate has its compensations. While I enjoy taking friends out and seeing them scan the elaborate dishes with the eager eyes of food-wise children, over the years I must have saved myself a lot of money when I have eaten alone. Veal-and-ham pie, boiled eggs, tinned salmon, tinned peaches plus corn flakes (discovered in college) and a delightful addiction acquired in New York—the product hadn't existed in my Welsh childhood cottage cheese. Fromage à la Chamois. Better still—Fromage au Petit Trionon?

Compensation No. 2: Unless your hosts are themselves addicted to the hot stove, your marks as a house guest go steadily up.

When in New York I stay with my old friend Margalo Gillmore. While I do not aspire to the Oscar statuette engraved "Favorite Guest" (her list is small but select, from Lord Olivier on), I win hands down, as the easiest. From which you may deduce that, while my hostess is another author, there has never been a cookery book in her works. No Cordon Bleu she. Or I. She and I did have, earlier this year, dans la cuisine, one stimulating session. We decided to have two boiled eggs, each. Not only to have them, to cook them.

We had both done this before, separately, and not always successfully. end-product had always turned either transparently runny, or a lump of yellow powder encased in rubber. But I had heard recently the correct technique is, first of all, to pierce a tiny hole in each shell, to lay the eggs in a saucepan half of cold H₂O (fresh water, of course not salt), turn on the gas, stand and wait for the water to boil, bubble, then watch it going on just that, all over the eggs, for a and a half minutes, then swiftly catch each egg with the aid of a shaped spoon.

We followed the instructions. My box sewing-basket Margalo prised a which penetrated each shell sufficiently, at the first try. The rest without a hitch it was a delight to open each egg, to feel the yolk tenderly under the spoon, and the press the golden center till it fell into a consistency as soft as butter. Each egg tasted better than the first.

And two myths had been exploded. (A) "To many cooks . . ." (B) "I never enjoy their own cooking."

A last claim. I have come to realize that in Britain food is tinned, while America it is canned. Is it not possible that this could make a subtle difference to the flavor?

Peut-être.

Some analysts cite the sudden injection of political uncertainty in the Canadian scene as a major reason for the steep slide in the value of the Canadian dollar.

Trend Expected to Continue

Anyone purchasing Canadian currency today would have to pay slightly more than 3 cents on every dollar. The steel issues finished unchanged at 38 1/2 and 39 1/2. The aluminum stocks were up 1/2 to 53 1/2, while the zinc stocks were up 1/2 to 32.

Decline Linked to Quebec Vote

Analysts link the fall of the Canadian dollar to the overwhelming victory of the party that favors independence in the Quebec provincial elections on Nov. 27. The vote, though it is thought to have been influenced more by dissatisfaction with the defeated government's performance and doleful economic conditions than with separatism, was still charging a 2 percent drop in the value of the Canadian dollar.

Highs and Lows

Advances outscored declines yesterday. The Dow Jones Industrial Average rose 1 1/2 to 107 1/2. The S&P 500 rose 1/2 to 33 1/2. The Amex rose 1/2 to 107 1/2. The Nasdaq rose 1/2 to 107 1/2.

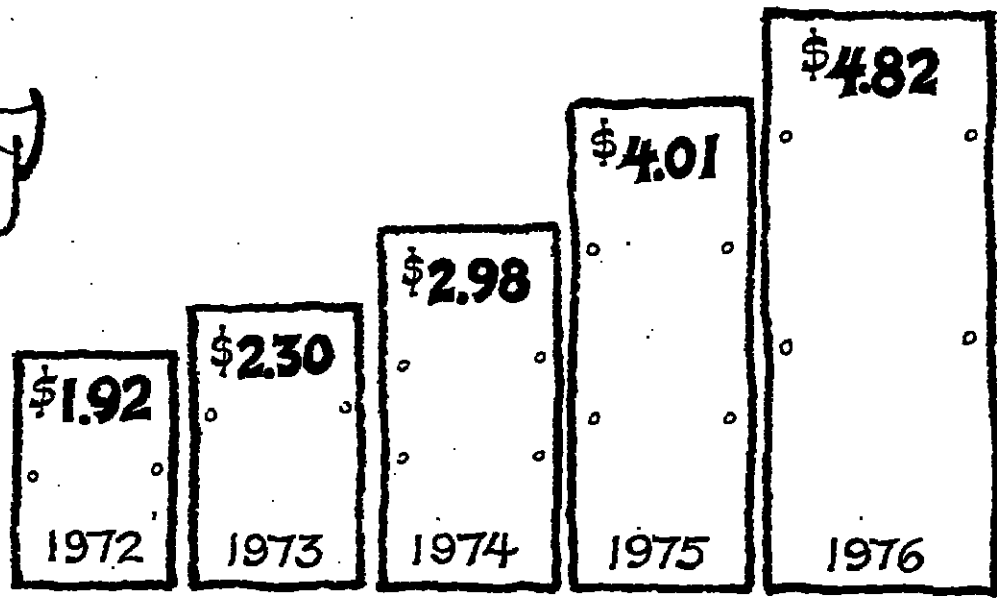

Pound and Gold Gain

LONDON, Nov. 30 (AP)—The pound rose slightly against the dollar today, closing at $1.6332 against yesterday's closing price of $1.6277. Elsewhere in Europe the dollar had a mixed day. The price of gold gained what it had lost in yesterday's trading around Europe.

P.C. Approves Rise in Natural Gas Price

The Federal Power Commission announced late yesterday that higher natural gas prices, tentatively approved more than a month ago, could go into effect today. The F.P.C. delayed its final decision until it was convinced that the increases would stay within estimates. The total cost is now $1.49 billion, according to the commission, which translates into a 15 cents increase on a current 40 cents average price per 100 cubic feet. For the consumer, the price will be about 6.5 percent, according to Jerome E. Hirsch, chief of the division of economics at the F.P.C. The increases, which nearly tripled the price of gas recently discovered in interstate markets, was authorized by the commission on the theory that increased production and less wasteful use of the fuel would be offset.

Perspiration, planning and the pay off

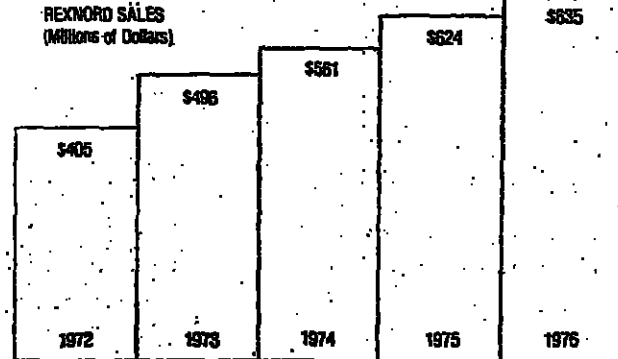

1976 earnings per share up 20% Rexnord—a different kind of capital goods company

From 1972 through 1976 earnings per common share have increased from $1.92 to $4.82 at an average annualized rate of 26%.

Over the past several years we have developed a number of significant strategies for the development of our business. And we have been working hard to implement these strategies to make Rexnord a truly different kind of capital goods company.

Rexnord Strategies Are Paying Off

Sales-1976 was the 15th consecutive year in which Rexnord achieved record sales. Over the period from 1972 through 1976, sales have increased at an average annual rate of 12%.

Dividends-Rexnord has an unbroken record of cash dividends to shareholders that goes back 83 years, one of the longest records among industrial companies.

The common dividend has been increased three times during the past two years to a current rate of $1.32 per share—a 22% increase.

Industry's consumable components and proprietary replacement parts make up more than half of Rexnord's total sales. These are the kinds of products that must be replaced and renewed on a continuing basis.

Unlike a major capital goods investment, the purchase of these essentials can't be deferred for long. A worn chain, sprocket, bearing or coupling must be replaced and Rexnord makes them all and more.

This emphasis on components helps broaden the base of our markets, too. These consumables for industry go to a wide variety of markets, including agricultural production, food processing, coal mining, quarrying and rock crushing, other raw material processing markets, materials handling and many more.

Capitalizing on Offsetting Business Cycles. In the U.S. our broadening market and product mix helps minimize the usual cyclical sales pattern of a capital goods company. Many of the markets we serve have offsetting cyclical patterns.

The business cycle of our Process Machinery operations differs from the cycle of Construction Machinery, which also differs from our Environmental Control Equipment line. Temporary softness in one business is usually offset by strength in the others.

The multinational aspect of Rexnord manufacturing and marketing facilities helps us serve world markets from the most strategic world source. And it lets us capitalize on the counter-cyclical nature of world markets.

Growth Markets and the Examination of Our Product Portfolio. A key part of our corporate strategy is to have the right products for the right markets for today and for the long haul. This requires continuing market evaluation in terms of current profitability and future potential from existing products. And we're constantly probing for new products and markets with solid future profit potential.

As a result of this strategy, we have made significant acquisitions in the U.S.A. and world-wide, and have disposed of product lines and facilities that didn't measure up to our long range goals.

It is this strategy which has permitted Rexnord to build a company well situated to serve markets with above average growth prospects for the future.

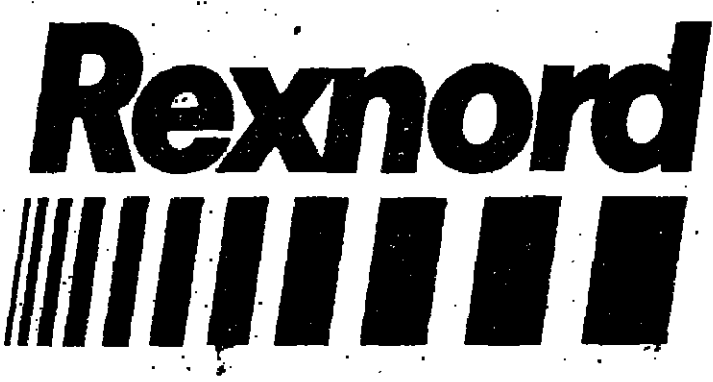

Expanding Our World-Wide Market Base. In 1976 sales of Rexnord products outside the U.S.A. amounted to over $217,000,000.

Rexnord operates 66 plants world-wide. Our world-wide marketing organization and manufacturing facilities allow us to serve world markets from the most advantageous source.

Rexnord and Tomorrow. Rexnord is a world-wide manufacturer and marketer of components and finished products essential to the basic needs of the world: The need for a sustained food supply, for raw material production, for preserving and improving the environment and for industrial expansion.

We have developed and implemented a number of basic strategies for the conduct of our business. They have proven right over the past several years and we believe that when applied with a flexible hand they will provide a prosperous future course for our shareholders and employees.

Write for more information. These are a few reasons why Rexnord is a different kind of capital goods company. If you would like to know more, we would be happy to send you our new Annual Report and Corporate Brochure which will be published soon. For copies, write W.C. Messinger, Chairman, Rexnord Inc., P.O. Box 2022, Milwaukee, WI 53201.

Technology: New Batteries for Cars and Utilities

tion in August 1978 (about five years late), are designed to permit advanced fuels to be tested far beyond their usual lifetimes without interfering with other tests.

The estimated cost of $1.1 billion for the Hanford fast-flux reactor covers the period up to completion of the reactor, whose cost is estimated at $540 million.

The rest of the money pays for several complete charges, or 'cores,' of plutonium-rich fuel, non-structure capital equipment, spare equipment and parts, research, development and operations.

Although the responsible agency, the Agriculture Department Approves Sales to Jordan and Poland energy Research and Development Administration, disagrees, the G.A.O. feels that most of the cost of three additional buildings at Hanford, for maintenance and storage, fits in with materials examination and fuel storage amounting to $229 million — should also be charged to the fast-flux program.

The fast-flux reactor is expected to go critical, that is, experience its first sustained nuclear chain reaction, in August 1979 and build up to its full heat output of 400 million watts in February 1980.

Despite unresolved safety and technical problems, development administration project managers told the G.A.O. that chances for further delays and cost overruns are lower than in the past. Design is complete and more than 60 percent of the construction is finished.

Kennecott Sets Terms of Sale Of Peabody Unit

By HERBERT KOSETZ... Kennecott Copper Corporation disclosed yesterday the terms of the sale of its Peabody Coal subsidiary to a consortium of the Newmont Mining Corporation, the Williams Companies, the Bechtel Corporation, the Fluor Corporation and the Equitable Life Assurance Society of America.

notes. The notes would be payable Jan. 2, 1978 and carry an interest rate charged by the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company at the closing date or 6 percent, whichever is higher.

It also will receive $100 million in cash from the sale of Peabody's Australian operations to Broken Hill Proprietary.

The balance of the $1.2 billion purchase price will be paid in 30-year, 5 percent subordinated income notes. They will have an initial face value of $125 million but counting the interest, will yield Kennecott the remaining $400 million of the purchase price.

Frank R. Milliken, chairman of Kennecott told shareholders that Kennecott will use the proceeds of the Peabody sale to reduce long term debt and expand its copper business. He said an expansion of copper production was justified in spite of the present weakness of the copper market.

Interest Conflict Charged in Comptroller Bank Leases

By ROBERT D. HERSHEY Jr.
Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—A House subcommittee charged today that a "serious" conflict of interest exists in the leasing of space in buildings owned by institutions supervised by the Comptroller of the Currency of the Federal Reserve System.

In a study by the House Subcommittee on Commerce, Consumer and Monetary Affairs declared that the Comptroller's office spends at least $274,000 more for these facilities than it pays for comparable space owned by the Government.

Representative Benjamin S. Rosenthal, a Democrat who heads the subcommittee, held in a letter to Acting Comptroller Robert Bloom that leases by the Comptroller and national banks in their capacity as landlord, negotiations over rental terms and the resolution of occupancy disputes with entities regulated by the Comptroller constitute a serious conflict of interest," Mr. Rosenthal said.

Mr. Bloom, responding to an inquiry, said through a spokesman he had received a copy of Mr. Rosenthal's letter and would "give it careful consideration" and reply in due course.

The subcommittee study listed 30 national banks around the country that receive nearly $500,000 a year from space rentals to the Comptroller's office. The individual rents range from $300 for the First National Bank of Cambridge, Ohio, to $102,487 for the Bank of America in San Francisco. Only seven exceed $5,000 a year.

None of the banks renting space to the Comptroller are in New York, New Jersey or Connecticut.

The Comptroller's office has previously been criticized for allegedly luxurious quarters, most recently early this year when banking regulators were charged with generally lax supervision in connection with well-publicized problems at First Chicago Corporation, a bank holding company, said he would not apologize for having a rug on his floor. The subcommittee list did not show First Chicago as the recipient of rentals from the Comptroller's office.

Mr. Rosenthal said today that "excessive expenditures for prestige office space is a wasteful luxury that bank customers cannot afford." The Comptroller's office is financed by the nation's 4,700 national banks, whose levies have been sharply increased recently.

47 BOX EXECUTIVES GET JAIL AND FINES

modation, the manufacturer of each pays more for cartons than he would if there were clean competition between the producers," he said. "Presumably, this additional cost is passed along to the ultimate consumer."

The indictment specifically charged the defendants with a conspiracy to violate the Sherman Antitrust Act. Earlier 22 other corporations pleaded no contest and were fined amounts varying from $15,000 to $50,000. Their executives pleaded no contest. Another executive also pleaded no contest; his sentencing was set for Dec. 18.

One corporation, Consolidated Packing of Chicago, and two executives, Vern Keplford, general manager for national sales of the Potlatch Corporation of San Francisco, and Melvin Riecke, a vice president of Consolidated Packaging, pleaded not guilty and are awaiting trial.

The case, initiated last February, involved most of the large and medium-sized companies in the industry.

In one of the most celebrated pricing cases 29 manufacturers, including General Electric and Westinghouse, were cited as defendants, along with 45 executives in 1960. Seven of the executives were given jail sentences.

Those who were sentenced today, and their sentences, were:

Genl Adams, manager internal operations, folding cartons, Grand Rapids, Mich., 30 days in jail and $5,000 fine; James J. Barlow, sales manager, folding cartons, F.H. Best Co., Inc., 30 days in jail and $5,000 fine; Robert E. Barry, general manager, marketing services, carton div., Allen Box Board Co., Alton, Ill., six months probation and $10,000 fine; George W. Berry Sr., senior vice president, Packaging Corporation of America, Evanston, Ill., 30 days in jail and $5,000 fine; Frank D. Bertrian, president, Interstate Folding Co., Akron, Ohio, 10 days in jail and $10,000 fine; R. Bruce Brum, president and chief operating officer, Contilac Corp., 60 days in jail and $5,000 fine; Richard A. Buchanan, sales manager, north central area, Diamond International Corp., 30 days in jail and $5,000 fine; M.L. Chappelle, vice president, sales, Michigan Carton Co., Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., 30 days in jail and $5,000 fine; Ernest J. Curtis, national general manager, folding cartons and light dividers, International Paper Co., six months probation and $10,000 fine; Allen G. DeLoach, midwest sales manager, folding cartons, F.H. Best Co., Inc., 30 days in jail and $5,000 fine; Carl DeFaria, vice president and regional general manager, folding cartons, Federal Paper Board Co. Inc., Milwaukee, Wis., five days in jail and $10,000 fine; C.G. DeWachter, plant general manager, Contilac Corporation of America, 30 days in jail and $5,000 fine; James C. Dieck, sales manager (Chicago), Heerner Walcott Corp., 30 days in jail and $5,000 fine; Gordon Ditro, vice president, sales, Braun Co., Pasadena, Calif., five days in jail and $5,000 fine; Eugene J. Dornick, sales manager, folding cartons, F.H. Best Co., 500 fine; Clark W. Notice of Offer to Purchase for Cash
All Outstanding Common Shares
Canadian Export Gas & Oil Ltd.

Canex Placer Limited

THIS OFFER IS CONDITIONED ON ITS ACCEPTANCE BY THE HOLDERS OF AT LEAST 4,217,000 SHARES (BEING APPROXIMATELY 51% OF THE OUTSTANDING SHARES) BEFORE 5:00 P.M. TORONTO TIME (EASTERN STANDARD TIME) ON DECEMBER 23, 1976, UNLESS SUCH CONDITION IS WAIVED. THIS OFFER (UNLESS WITHDRAWN BY CANEX PLACER LIMITED AS PROVIDED FOR IN THE OFFER TO PURCHASE) WILL EXPIRE AT 5:00 P.M. TORONTO TIME ON MARCH 29, 1977, UNLESS EXTENDED.

Canex Placer Limited, a British Columbia corporation ("Canex Placer"), a wholly-owned subsidiary of Placer Development Limited, a British Columbia corporation ("Placer"), is offering to purchase for cash all outstanding common shares, $6.15 per share (the "Shares"), of Canadian Export Gas & Oil Ltd., an Alberta corporation ("CEGO"), at $6.15 (Canadian) per share net to the seller (or the U.S. dollar equivalent for shareholders with United States addresses), subject to the terms and conditions set forth in the Offer to Purchase dated November 29, 1976 and the related Letter of Tender (collectively, the "Offer") which have been mailed to the holders of record of such Shares. If, prior to 5:00 P.M. Toronto time (Eastern Standard Time) on December 23, 1976, 4,217,000 Shares (being approximately 51% of the outstanding Shares) or more have been duly tendered and not withdrawn, Canex Placer will purchase all of such Shares and all of the Shares subsequently duly tendered and not withdrawn prior to March 29, 1977, or such later date to which the Offer may be extended (the "Expiration Date"). If fewer than 4,217,000 Shares are duly tendered and not withdrawn by 5:00 P.M. Toronto time on December 23, 1976, Canex Placer may, at its option, either withdraw the Offer, or elect to waive this condition, in which event Canex Placer will purchase all Shares duly tendered and not withdrawn prior to the Expiration Date. Shares tendered pursuant to the Offer may be withdrawn at any time prior to 5:00 P.M. Toronto time at the place of tender on whichever is the later of December 6, 1976 or the expiration of seven days from the date that the Offer was mailed to shareholders, and, if such Shares have not theretofore been purchased by Canex Placer, at any time after January 27, 1977.

On November 12, 1976 Home Oil Company Limited made an offer to purchase all of the outstanding common shares of CEGO for cash at $5.80 (Canadian) net per share (or the U.S. dollar equivalent for shareholders with United States addresses), which offer expires March 14, 1977, unless extended. Such offer is subject to acceptance by the holders of at least 4,217,000 Shares before 5:00 P.M. Toronto time on December 6, 1976 unless such condition is waived.

Newmont Mining Corporation ("Newmont") is the holder of approximately 18.8% of the outstanding Shares of CEGO. Newmont has not advised Canex Placer as to whether it will accept the Canex Placer Offer. However, available information indicates that Newmont is in the same position as any other shareholder and can take advantage of the Canex Placer Offer for any other offer.

Canex Placer will pay to any Soliciting Dealer (as defined in the Offer to Purchase) whose name appears in the appropriate space in the Letter of Tender a fee of $0.10 (in Canadian or U.S. funds as the case may be) for each Share tendered under such Letter of Tender and purchased pursuant to the Offer, including any Shares purchased from a Soliciting Dealer tendering for his own account, excluding any Shares tendered by Newmont Mining Corporation. The solicitation fee shall not be less than $15 nor more than $2,000 (in Canadian or U.S. funds as the case may be) in respect of Shares tendered by any single beneficial owner of Shares. Tendering shareholders will not be obligated to pay brokerage commissions or transfer taxes on the purchases of Shares by Canex Placer.

Subject to the terms and conditions of the Offer, payment for Shares duly tendered prior to 5:00 P.M. Toronto time on December 23, 1976 and purchased pursuant to the Offer will be made as soon as practicable after the date of purchase. If the Offer is not withdrawn on a date pursuant to the conditions of the Offer, payment for Shares duly tendered thereafter and purchased pursuant to the Offer will be made as soon as practicable after their respective tender dates. Payment for Shares tendered and purchased pursuant to the Offer will be made in Canadian funds, except that where the address set forth under the signature of any tendering shareholder on the Letter of Tender shall be within the United States, payment for the Shares shall be made in U.S. funds, unless such shareholder otherwise elects.

The Offer is made only by the Offer to Purchase and the Letter of Tender which contain important information which should be read before any action is taken.

The Letter of Tender and certificates for your Common Shares should be sent or delivered by you or your broker, dealer, bank or trust company to the Depository or the Forwarding Agent at the addresses set forth in the Offer. Healey Tells Commons the I.M.F. Isn't Seeking Drastic Policy Shift

Denis Healey, Chancellor of the Exchequer, told the House of Commons yesterday that the International Monetary Fund was not "seeking to force a fundamental change in direction in present government policy" as a condition for a big loan.

"On the contrary," he declared, "we have been assured over and over again that the basic thrust of our policy is right."

Although he gave a gloomy forecast for Britain's immediate economic future, he indicated that the speculation of harsh deflationary measures was unfounded. Mr. Healey spoke after weeks that have been buzzing with reports among politicians and in the newspapers that the I.M.F. was laying down tough conditions for the $2.9 billion loan that Britain is seeking. The I.M.F. inspectors are at present taking the economic pulse here and a decision is expected this month.

Most of the speculation centered on reported divisions in the cabinet between the advocates of stringent economic discipline, led by Mr. Healey, who, it was said, at the behest of the I.M.F. want sharply deflationary measures, and the left wingers, led by Anthony Wedgwood Benn and Peter Shore.

Carlos André Perez, President of Venezuela, wound up a European tour in Lisbon yesterday where he told a group of reporters that his nation plans to sell oil to Portugal on soft credit terms. The Portuguese oil transaction, he explained, will be made through a program established by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries of which Venezuela is a member. OPEC's credit program for oil is designed to provide assistance to third-world countries. According to the Venezuelan President, Portugal, as one of Europe's poorest nations, qualifies for participation in the program. "It will be easy to demonstrate to OPEC that Portugal is not a rich country and is in the process of development," Mr. Perez said.

The Venezuelan President also said that his nation would provide additional public and private investments in Portugal. "Several Venezuelan trade groups will arrive in Portugal starting next week to study investments," he added.

The nation's 150,000 Certified Public Accountants were urged to speak out yesterday by Wallace E. Olson, president of the American Institute of C.P.A.'s. He told a Washington meeting of C.P.A.'s that they should be aggressive in expressing opinions on public issues. Mr. Olson urged the membership to show a willingness to take the risk of commenting on controversial matters. He also suggested that C.P.A.'s be willing to be "less sensitive to client interest." According to Mr. Olson, C.P.A.'s should use their skills at measurement and analysis to help governments solve their problems.

Warren Leslie, former director of public relations and fashion promotion for Revlon Inc. and before that sales promotion director and vice president of the Neiman-Marcus Company, has been named senior vice president of corporate communications for Max Factor & Company. Since 1966, Mr. Leslie has headed his own public relations and promotion firm known as Warren Leslie Associates. He is scheduled to join Max Factor & Company early next year.

Foreign Investment in U.S. Equity

Rises by $12.5 Billion in 9 Months

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30 (Reuters)—Net foreign investment in United States equity and debt issues rose by almost $12.5 billion in the first nine months of 1976, according to Federal Reserve Board data.

The increase compares with a rise of $8.1 billion in the year-earlier level.

Included in the increase for the current nine months are net purchases of $2.57 billion of equity and $9.89 billion of debt issues. The debt portion includes $7.21 billion of United States Government securities and $490 million of United States corporate bonds.

Crucible.

What we're talking about is the pragmatic crucible of the capital markets. Where every day our experience and skills as investment bankers are tested against the hard realities of the marketplace.

With millions of dollars of our capital constantly at risk in the underwritings we manage or in which we participate every year (1,028 in 1975), this judgment can be severe, with little tolerance for error.

But the final judgment of our ability to provide the right answers to financing problems is made by our investment banking clients. One concrete measurement of performance is our record of maintaining clients and attracting new ones. Another is the growth of our financing business.

For instance, some of our investment banking relationships with major companies began as long ago as the early 1930s. But in the past five years—since 1972—we've performed investment banking services for 231 companies and government entities which used our capabilities for the first time. Mainly for public financings, but also for mergers and acquisitions and other special services.

Since 1972, we've been managers or advisors for $41.5 billion in corporate, international and municipal financings. During the past five years, our financing business grew to the highest levels in our 103-year history.

Some perspective of what we do as investment bankers comes out of our mix of financings during the past five years.

Since 1972, we've raised $2.8 billion for oil, mining, and energy-related companies, $900 million for the steel industry, $800 million for the chemical industry, and $660 million for health-care companies.

In international finance, we've drawn on experience that goes back to the firm's beginnings in 1873—when large amounts of U.S. capital were raised abroad—to pioneer financings in this complex arena. Among them: private placements of securities in Japan and the Mideast, and the first long-term U.S. public debt issue for a foreign corporation. In 1976, we have been managers or advisors for 26 international financings, totalling $1.1 billion, for issuers from 14 countries.

In municipal finance, we're as familiar with the urban crisis as anybody. New Yorkers, for instance, know us for our work recently in helping to unravel a rough financial problem in the city of Yonkers, as manager in financing a mammoth public improvement project in Suffolk County, and for a host of projects for the New York State Dormitory Authority.

Across the country, we've served as managing bankers or advisors for 60% of the largest municipally owned or operated electric utilities, and in the same capacities for approximately 50% of the nearly $2 billion raised for airport facilities during the past five years. We help to build power plants, hospitals, housing and transit systems in 33 states. And continue to be the leading senior banker, in volume of financing, for all categories of tax-exempt revenue bonds.

Investment banking in the 1970s is no longer simply a matter of underwriting and distributing securities. It comprises many specialized services and requires specialists—in private placements, mergers and acquisitions, environmental financing, financial consulting for city and state government, lease financing, real estate and venture capital.

We provide them all, through a staff of 125 people, located in strategic financial centers in the U.S. and abroad. In New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Tokyo, Paris and London.

Secret Funds for Beame Campaign Reported Tied to Promise of Favor

...to discuss the matter, and Bernard Beame denied participating in the deal. Mr. Morgenthau refused to discuss his investigation.

The persons who told of the deal said that the two foreign corporations to which Mr. Boomis had made out the checks were controlled by Arnold E. Kagan, a builder and financier who contributed $10,000 to the 1973 Beame campaign.

Mr. Goldman, Mr. Boomis, Bernard Beame and Mr. Kagan are all under investigation by Mr. Morgenthau. The investigation was disclosed on July 3 by a lawyer for Mr. Kagan, who was trying to block a subpoena issued for the records of the two foreign companies.

In a court hearing on July 24, the District Attorney's office acknowledged that it was investigating "possible bribery, bribe-receiving, grand larceny, forgery, conspiracy as well as violation of the election law."

Since then, The New York Times has conducted its own investigation into the contributions Mr. Boomis said he had made that had never been recorded.

Associates of two of the principals under investigation said that Mr. Goldman and Bernard Beame met with Mr. Boomis in October 1973 and urged him to contribute more money to the campaign.

Mr. Boomis had contributed about $12,000 up to that time, but half of it had to be returned when it was learned that he had a project before the Board of Estimate at the time he gave the money.

Mr. Boomis agreed during the meeting to contribute more, but asked in return for participation in the huge Battery Park City development project on the southwestern tip of Manhattan, the sources said. Mr. Goldman and Bernard Beame allegedly agreed to help him get it.

Mr. Boomis met later with Mr. Goldman who told him to make his checks out for the additional contributions to the CJR Corporation, which was registered in Liechtenstein, and the Edric Corporation, which was based in Liberia.

Both companies are reportedly controlled by Mr. Kagan. All records of their transactions were sent to him, according to sources in one of the companies, and both concerns have interests in Mr. Kagan's construction company, Hegeman-Harris Inc.

Mr. Boomis never met Mr. Kagan, but made out the checks to the two foreign companies at Mr. Goldman's direction and gave them to Mr. Goldman, according to the friends of Mr. Boomis.

Donations Not Reported

Later, Mr. Boomis got back the canceled checks to the two foreign companies, but the money never showed up in the official records of the Beame campaign committee. Where, or to whom, the money ultimately went is unclear.

After the election, Mr. Boomis pursued his interest in obtaining participation in the project that had been promised him—Battery Park City.

However, he then was told by Mr. Goldman that Battery Park City was state controlled, and there was resistance to his participation that could not be overcome, the sources said.

Instead, Mr. Boomis was offered the opportunity to develop a valuable piece of cleared city land at the southwest corner of Murray and Greenwich Streets in the middle of the Washington Street urban renewal area just north of the World Trade Center.

Mr. Boomis proceeded to develop plans to build a 50-story luxury apartment tower—the tallest apartment building ever projected for the downtown area—at a cost of $50 million.

The developer obtained site approval from the city's Housing and Development Board. Roger Starr, who headed E.D.A. at the time, said that he had felt Mr. Boomis would not be able to raise the money for the project but had gone along with him because no one else had been offering to finance development of the land.

Mr. Boomis has told friends that Mr. Goldman promised him the help of the Beame administration in obtaining Federal, state, and city financing for his apartment tower at the time the land was offered to him.

The help never came, according to the developer's friends, and Mr. Boomis began talking about his contributions in political circles to try to pressure the Beame administration.

On March 27, 1975, he disclosed in an interview with The Times that he had contributed $25,000 to $35,000, rather than the $12,000 recorded in campaign records.

Following publication of this information, Mr. Boomis was called to the District Attorney's office, his friends said, and eventually he decided to tell about his meeting with Mr. Goldman and Bernard Beame as well as the checks he had given to Mr. Goldman to be laundered through Mr. Kagan's foreign companies.

Mr. Kagan declined through his attorney, Martin R. Gold, to discuss the transaction. Mr. Goldman's attorney, Arthur S. Friedman, said his client would not discuss the matter because he had advised him not to talk to the press "about anything" since he had been the subject of both state and Federal investigations.

Bernard Beame denied in a telephone interview that he ever had made any commitments to anybody in return for contributions.

"I didn't collect money, I spent it," he said. "When I needed funds I would go to the finance committee and tell them." Mr. Goldman and Mr. Boomis were both on the finance committee.

"There was one time where I went to Irving and told him we needed some money and he brought him [Mr. Boomis] over and he started talking about seeing someone," he said. "I walked away and I told Irving not to bring him around anymore. I didn't want to see him."

"One time after the election, he [Mr. Boomis] approached me and said didn't I know that he gave this and that, and I said no."

Mr. Beame said that he had dealt mostly with Mr. Goldman on money matters rather than the chairman of the finance committee, Charles Bessine, because he knew Mr. Goldman better.

Mr. Goldman, whom Mayor Beame named Commissioner of Cultural Affairs for a time after the election, was very active as a fund-raiser in the Mayor's campaign.

He was indicted last year on charges brought by Maurice H. Nadjari, the former special state prosecutor, alleging defrauding of the Transit Authority through a dummy company. The indictment was dismissed by the late Judge John M. Murphy, but the dismissal has been appealed. A Federal indictment on similar charges is also pending against Mr. Goldman.

Mr. Boomis had more than $100 million in building projects in various planning stages until 18 months ago, when financial and political pressures stopped many of them.

Five years ago, he was a little-known specialist in brownstone reconstruction when contacts he made in the administration of former Mayor John V. Lindsay brought him major development projects.

For example, he won approval to build a $25 million cold storage warehouse at Hunts Points with a prize by the city to finance a $12 million deep-water pier at the site.

Mr. Boomis received $1.4 million from the city for site preparation work on the pier, but failed to pay the subcontractors who had done the work. They have since sued him for the money, and he faces at least $1.5 million more in liens on four other projects he built.

British Cabinet Ministers Warned Against Disclosure to Journalists

LONDON, Nov. 30 (Reuters)—British Cabinet ministers were warned today against leaking information to journalists or other politicians when their views were disputed by colleagues.

An inquiry ordered by the then Prime Minister, Sir Harold Wilson, last July recommended stricter rules on the copying and guarding of Cabinet documents and urged that they not be kept longer than necessary.

The inquiry was commissioned after information about Cabinet discussion of a controversial child-welfare project was leaked to a publication. It also followed disquiet about the published diaries of a former minister, the late Richard Crossman, which discussed Cabinet meetings in the 1960's in detail.

Needham, Harper & Steers to Go Private

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY
Needham, Harper & Steers, the country's 17th largest advertising agency, is the latest to become disenchanted with its publicly held status. Yesterday it announced plans to go private.

Considering the few ad agencies that have gone public, probably a higher percentage of them have returned to private ownership than in any other industry. There are now nine public ad agencies in the top 25.

So far the companies that have tried to turn back the clock with varying degrees of success are Clinton E. Frank Inc., Chicago; McCaffrey & McCall; Wells, Rich, Greene, and Tracy-Locke Advertising, Dallas.

Needham offered 375,000 shares at $23 a share in April 1972. If it gets approval from its stockholders early next year, it will offer $12.50 (about 30 cents more than book value) for the buy-back. The deal, the agency said, also requires "satisfactory arrangements for financing."

Needham stock was quoted in the over-the-counter market at $8.75 bid yesterday morning. It ended the day, after the announcement, at $10.75 bid, $11.75 asked.

Paul C. Harper Jr., chief executive of the agency, said: "We think the company and its employees will be better served when we are privately held. Then we can devote all of our time and resources to the quality of our work and to our clients and new business."

He also said that going private would put the agency in "a better position to keep, reward and attract good, quality people."

The point there is that rewarding workers with stock options for stock that is not increasing in value isn't much of a reward. So an agency in that position is forced to find other reward systems that cut into earnings, which causes a further depression of the stock.

According to Needham, it consulted with the First Boston Corporation and Salomon Brothers in coming to the $12.50 price.

The stock's record high was $34 during the summer of 1972, and the low was $8.50 in 1974.

Andrew Melnick, an analyst with Drexel, Burnham & Company, commented: "They were too small to be public with all of those problems. They might as well be private."

He added that Wall Street was reacting favorably toward ad agency stock these days as the advertising business enjoys one of the best growth years on record. He also said that the big public agencies were all doing well.

Clinton E. Frank Inc. went public in the fall of 1971, selling 150,000 shares at $15.50. The agency bought back about 95 percent of those shares beginning in October 1973 for $10.75, the approximate book value. At the time the stock was trading at about $5 or $6 a share.

McCaffrey & McCall brought back more than 600,000 shares at book value, $9.25, in 1974 when the stock was selling between $4.50 and $5.

Carter's Ad Agency Wins Bank Business

President-elect Jimmy Carter's ad agency will soon be doing advertising for the bank. Mr. Carter uses.

The National Bank of Georgia, headed by Thomas Bertram Lance, who is bound for a Cabinet-level post in the new Administration, is moving its $300,000 advertising account from Braselton & Johnson, Atlanta, to Gerald Rabboon Advertising, also in Atlanta.

The move has left Al Braselton, president of the agency that had the business about three years, "completely baffled." There had been no complaints about the work and the company was in the midst of new planning for the bank, he said.

"I can only guess," he said, "that Bert Lance wanted to give it to his friend Gerry."

The former chairman of the bank, King D. Cleveland, will be coming back to run it, Mr. Braselton said, adding, "It's ironic—he's the one who hired us."

About 6 percent of its stock, which first went on sale in October 1969 for $14.50, is still held publicly.

The Tracy-Locke story is a little different because there was no formal buy-back. It had sold 150,000 shares to the public in December 1971 for $12 a share. Toward the end of 1973 and the beginning of 1974, with the price "frozen" around $4, its board decided to buy up stock as it became available—no pressure.

There are still some 40,000 Tracy-Locke shares held outside the agency, but since the number of shareholders is below 300 the company need no longer report to the Securities and Exchange Commission.

While all of the other agencies that moved to go private used cash, Wells, Rich, Greene did it differently. In the autumn of 1974 it offered $3 cash and $8 principal amount of 10-year subordinated debentures with an interest rate of 10 percent. At the time its stock, which had come out at $17.50, was trading at $5.50.

The agency had 1.6 million shares in public hands and now has about 450,000.

Meanwhile Gray Advertising, which has approximately 900,000 shares outstanding, said that its previously announced offer to buy back 200,000 shares of its own stock for $18.50 a share would be mailed to shareholders in early January. "It seemed to be a reasonable buy," remarked Edward H. Meyer, president.

Ovaltine Premium Offer

Ovaltine, the venerable but reformulated vitamin-enriched milk additive, is going to promote itself for the first time through a premium offer in comic books. The ad, by DRG Inc., will run in the November issues of the National Comics Group—Batman, Wonder Woman and Superman—and will offer magnetized crests of National Hockey League teams as well as a board with an easel to keep track of team standings. The crests go for $1 and a label, and the team-standings board go for $1.50 and a label.

Seventeen's Spring Survey

Seventeen magazine, having surveyed the marketplace, has announced that American teen-age girls broke the spending record for spring clothing this year. The magazine puts the figure at $8.5 billion.

The "Spring Apparel Buying Survey 1976" is based on 1,126 responses to 2,000 questionnaires.

Outlook Good for Black Job Seekers

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

Our business is running about 50 percent ahead of just a year ago," Richard Clarke said in an interview last week. "We're one of the first barometers of business conditions."

The statement bodes well for experienced black job seekers since Mr. Clarke heads Richard Clarke Associates, a 19-year-old firm that is the nation's largest recruiter of black management-level personnel.

Mr. Clarke, who is black and deals primarily with companies that seek experienced, college-educated blacks earning more than $20,000 a year, pointed out that, although the rate of placements was still behind the job level of 1968-73, there was reason for optimism about the future. "I don't think we'll see an oversupply of management talent in the next five years," he said. "Attrition takes care of that."

There is a shortage even now of such professionals as accountants, staff lawyers, salesmen, personnel experts, engineers and scientists, according to Mr. Clarke.

Black women with such experience are ahead of the game," he said. The fact that they are black, and female, also means that companies hiring often fill two sets of minority requirements.

Mr. Clarke noted an interesting aspect of black job market opportunities. In recent years blacks typically have gone into the fields of medicine, real estate, education, civil service and law. "I don't think we'll see an oversupply of management talent in the next five years," he said. "Attrition takes care of that."

This means that many experienced blacks have to move sideways to move upwardly. As a result, he said, many blacks are moving into the telephone industry, for example, where they can often fill two sets of minority requirements.

Mr. Clarke pointed out that today's business has to focus more on how they can help companies. Companies, he asserted, are not looking for altruistic purposes but for the bottom line, "cold, hard cash."

Performance is a must, he said, adding that he had recently found a 30-year-old assistant treasurer for one of the 500 largest companies in the country, at a salary of $60,000. He will be expected to perform or he will be fired, Mr. Clarke said.

For the value of an M.B.A. degree, Mr. Clarke advises young people right out of college to take a job. "My theory is that what work is all about and a sense of where your best skills are and then take an M.B.A.," he said.

Exhibition Is Urged

Preparing for Future

Today's slow-growth economy, and more college graduates competing for a relatively static number of jobs, has led to a new emphasis on the need for new flexibility, such as basic preparation for two careers, not one.

As early as possible in one's life, should begin to train for two or three careers, Dr. Ernest Dichter, director of the Center for the Study of the Future, said.

Dr. Dichter, who is a psychologist and a futurist, said that the study of the future is not just a matter of predicting what will happen, but of understanding the forces that will shape the future.

harder and harder to get good jobs." He reasoned that, if colleges stressed the two-career approach, more students might plan for at least one career.

Examples of such flexibility are easy to find, such as the Radcliffe student who wants to be a writer but majored in oceanography and then took a program in accounting. He found a position with an accounting firm.

Advice Is Offered

On Planning Ahead

Career counselors offer a wealth of advice for the rising executive. Recently John D. Arnolds, president of Applied Synergistics Inc., included these suggestions:

1. Urging the executive on-the-rise to obtain the broadest overall view of the company, he said, "It's best to understand the business as a whole from the top down." Aim for a spot such as assistant to the president, a job on the corporate staff or in an investment banking function, he urged.

2. "Positive personal visibility." A successful manager, he says, finds ways to assure that his own innovations are recognized.

3. Along the way, the rising executive needs to maintain good relationships with superiors. "Management teams frequently move up together," he says. "So work at making your superior successful."

4. Mortgage Loans by Savings Banks

Equal Record $777 Million in Month

Savings banks in New York State made $777 million in mortgage loans in October, equaling the record high for a month set back in December 1972, the New York Savings Banks Association reported yesterday.

October's mortgage loans compared with $560 million granted in September and $433 million in October 1975, the association said. Total commitments for future mortgage loans declined in October by $123 billion, however, against an increase in September of $212 billion.

Assets of New York savings banks totaled $72.3 billion on Oct. 31, an increase of $6.7 billion over the year-earlier level, the association reported.

PRISON MEDICAL CARE ASSAYED BY JUSTICES

'Deliberate Indifference' Is Called Unconstitutional, but Accident or Malpractice Alone Is Not

By LESLEY OELSNER
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30—The Supreme Court ruled today that "deliberate indifference" by prison officials to serious medical needs of an inmate violates the Eighth Amendment ban against cruel and unusual punishment and gives the inmate ground to sue the officials in Federal court.

The Court stressed, however, in an opinion by Thurgood Marshall for a seven-man majority, that the indifference had to be "deliberate" and that accident or medical malpractice alone is not a constitutional violation. It also stressed that for the inmate to get his complaint heard in court he would have to allege in it "acts or omissions" that were "sufficiently harmful" to demonstrate this level of indifference.

These two points prompted the sole dissent, by John Paul Stevens.

Justice Stevens contended that the majority's references to "deliberate" indifference "improperly attaches significance to the subjective motivation" of the prison official. He said that the decision whether there had been a violation of the Eighth Amendment should "turn on the character of the punishment rather than the motivation of the individual who inflicted the harm."

Earlier Decision Recalled

On the second point, Justice Stevens argued that the majority was ignoring one of its own earlier decisions, in which the Court gave more leeway to inmates who filed complaints on their own without the help of a lawyer than is given to ordinary plaintiffs.

The earlier Supreme Court ruling, Justice Stevens said, meant that courts should not throw out complaints filed by inmates on their own unless the court could see from the complaint that there was "beyond any doubt" no set of facts that could be proved to entitle him to relief.

Seven justices joined in the majority opinion and an eighth, Harry A. Blackmun, joined only in the final judgment. The decision generally states the law as it has been developing in the lower Federal courts.

The fact that the Justices adopted the lower court pattern, however, giving it the imprimatur of a Supreme Court decision, appears likely to increase the number of prisoner lawsuits alleging improper medical treatment.

Injured Texan Involved

The Court issued its opinion in the case of a Texas inmate, J. W. Gamble (Estelle v. Gamble, No. 75-929), who filed suit against the director of the state's prison department, the warden of his prison and the doctor who was medical director of the prison.

Mr. Gamble was injured when a bale of hay fell on him while he was unloading a truck as part of his prison work assignment. In his lawsuit, he complained of the treatment he received for this injury. The District Court dismissed his complaint on the ground that it did not state a claim that entitled him to relief. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit then reversed.

Mr. Gamble's treatment over the few months following the injury, according to his complaint, included examinations by several doctors, some medical tests, and various prescriptions. It did not include an X-ray, one prescription went un-filled for four days because the staff lost it and a doctor's order that he be moved from an upper to a lower bunk was not followed.

The appeals court found that Mr. Gamble's allegations regarding this treatment were enough to state a complaint that could be litigated. The Supreme Court disagreed, at least in the case of the doctor. The Court said, in effect, that if the doctor had been wrong at all, the proper remedy would be a malpractice suit in state courts.

The Justices remanded the case to the appeals court, however, for consideration of whether the complaint stated an actionable case against the other officials—the warden and the state prison director.

YOUTH SAYS IMPERIALE STRUCK HIM WITH A GUN

BELLEVILLE, N.J., Nov. 30 (UPI)—A Newark youth charged that Anthony Imperiale, New Jersey State Senator of Essex, hit him on the head with a pistol while trying to eject him from Mr. Imperiale's sporting goods store here.

The youth, David Maisto, 18 years old, filed a complaint yesterday charging the Senator with atrocious assault and battery. Eight stitches were needed to close a gash in his scalp, according to officials at Clara Maass Hospital here.

Frank Haight, the deputy police chief, said a hearing would be held in Municipal Court on Dec. 16 for Mr. Imperiale to answer the complaint.

Mr. Imperiale said he struck Mr. Maisto accidentally while trying to restrain him during an argument in which the youth allegedly used vulgar language in the store, the Global Arms. Mr. Imperiale is a part owner of the store.

Court Rules Against Policeman Who Shot 3 Men in Ohio Brawl

WASHINGTON, Nov. 30 (AP)—The Supreme Court ruled against an Ohio policeman who had been ordered by a jury to pay $531,000 to the families of two men he shot and killed and to a third man who was paralyzed by his bullet.

In an unsigned opinion, the Justices said they had changed their minds and had decided not to hear the appeal of a Columbus police officer, Raymond Belcher. Mr. Belcher had challenged the decision by the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, which upheld the jury verdict.

The case stemmed from a barroom brawl in Columbus in 1971. Mr. Belcher was off duty and out of uniform when a scuffle broke out. He intervened and shot and killed Robert Ruff and Michael Noe. He shot Casey Stengel, who was permanently paralyzed as a result of the wound.

Mr. Belcher appealed on the ground he was not acting as an official at the time he shot the three men.
